Back then, magicJack provided a highly cheap and on the traditional phone, which still an important extraction to date. However, the evolution of smartphones, long-distance phone cards and telephone plans intelligently has its purpose: new portability, configuration and low-cost operations challenges for major VoIP applications of recent times. To its credit, MagicJack helped respond well, and its smartphone app opened up wider opportunities to make features for the company. Sale The original app, released with the Plus device, has been called FREE CALLS, taking advantage of the signature function with a conspicuous Talk Free icon in a green background. While designers were left a cold touch with the flat look, 2D – user survey metrics from Coremetrics and Gomez showed a high degree of appreciation from users who appreciated the clarity of the call, purpose, and free use of the app. While our review showed the new application has satisfied their largest user base of all Samsung, Android and iPhone users (including tablet users), it still doesn't have support for Windows OS and Blackberry platforms. Which, however, is set to change soon with extensive upgrade plans included for the next generation of devices (magicJack GO and magicJack EXPRESS). Figure 1: magicJack App Interface & DialPadTrue to its brand identity, the magicJack Go app boasts some stop features:100% free calls to U.S., Canadian and Puerto Rican phone numbers and any other MagicJack number around the world. This, combined with the fact that the application itself is free to download (at no hidden cost), and doesn't cling to your mobile minutes or eat in your voice plan making it highly budget friendly. Compared to other connectivity applications like Viber, Skype or WhatsApp, magicapp is certainly a cut above both in terms of clarity and cost. Usher in the era of truly 'unlimited' local, international (only for other magicApp and magicJack users) and long-distance calls with this application. Automatic Contact Sync - MagicApp is designed to automatically sync with your Android or iOS contacts if you wish, lending a high degree of device portability. Works without a MagicJack account - Even if you don't have a MagicJack account, you can use the App! yes, you read that right. You can download the app and make outbound calls to numbers in the United States, Canada, or other MagicJack numbers. No more boring memberships, no more service charges until you're satisfied. It's easy for existing users to sign in and out of your account. Unified Contact Number – You can use the same number for the magicjack physical (used as a landline alternative) and the downloaded application. Once you sign in using your main magicJack account on the app, both your MagicJack device and smartphone with MagicApp installed ring at the same time, making sure you never miss another incoming call. Intuitive interface – The basic user interface is highly intuitive, as well as automatic import it also maintains a log of recent calls, segregating incoming and outgoing twains, as well as offering a free voicemail service. For those familiar with smartphone usage, everything shows up right where you expect, helping a seamless transition. The relevant controls and other buttons are also clear and easy to spot even for first-time users. Incoming calls are easy : starting with an asterisk, you can accept incoming calls to your MagicApp from anywhere in the world. Just have them dial 1-305-848-TALK (1-305-848-8255) and enter the MagicJack number, for example, 000-EXA-MPLE and you're done! Excellent call quality - MagicJack lives up to its reputation for high-quality high-definition audio. White noise and static interference are maintained at negligible levels, underlining their investment in call quality. SMS coming soon - Best of all is the Application is currently undergoing beta testing by sms and that the update is expected very soon. This will make it better than any other free SMS application like Skype, Viber, WeChat, Tango and WhatsApp. The main difference is that these other apps are limited to messaging other users of the same app. While the magicApp will be a real 'sms' app instead of just a messaging app disguised as a texting application. This is because with it you will be able to text any number around the world for free, these are the entries anyway. However we will have to wait to see if magicJack can actually keep this promise. It's not all rosy though. Like any app in development and beta-testing mode, magicApp still has some rough edges around its corners. While quarterly conferences promise further progress, there are a couple of features they might do with some care:Multiple numbers – While MagicApp designates the same number as your MagicJack device and unifies that account, as well as syncs your contacts, it doesn't automatically identify the profile of your actual mobile number. So all your contacts, who may have dialed your mobile number so far or saved it on one side, will see a new number if you connect via MagicApp. Less quibbles, all right, but since they already had the software to identify the contacts, it would have been nice to go that yard in and unify everything. A MagicApp account per device – This is not a huge disappointment, since MagicJack is still in the first place a single account per device type of service. The MagicJack physical device also activates the old MagicJack account if you're looking to sign up with existing user credentials, so it's no surprise that magicApp magicApp too to just one MagicJack account per device, no matter how many different instances of the app you may have downloaded. Android 2.3 or iOS 3 – Again, a small problem with graceful degradation, as the application does not respond to previous versions of Android and iOS beyond a point. Then again, there is rarely a chance that a modern smartphone user would not have the latest operating system. Simply put, the MagicApp takes a bold step forward in extending its free calling services to the world of smartphones. Services are still a work in progress outside of major iOS and Android operating systems, but the technology, interface, and call quality are excellent so far. Sale Figure 2: Competing Services- Viber, WeChat, Tango & WhatsApp support free messaging & file transfers the need to add more digital features (at least SMS and file transfers) as well as finding a way to reduce international rates calls coming in further, particularly for users outside the United States, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Canada, but that should not take away from a solid debut. Overview of the soon to be released magicJack App If you have been interested in saving money on your mobile phone bill then maybe the new magicJack App. magicApp cards is for you. Previous versions of the device have had their flaws or do not provide enough convenience that an app could. The original device requires a computer, which often creates non-fixed feature issues due to differences in individual computers. In order to combat this problem the company has developed the magicJack plus which goes a step further by allowing direct connection from a router/modem to a normal phone. A great advance, but still requiring a landline phone, and a phone line at home. In taking a further step forward in the evolution of products that are soon coming out with the App. With the App you will get all the advantages of Magic Jack while being able to make calls directly from your mobile phone. Imagine that, whenever you are on Wi-Fi/3G/4G/LTE at high speed you will have unlimited minutes through six the App, from you smartphones all for a very low price. And believe it or not, but the deal gets even sweeter! Initial reports say that the App and calls will be free if you are already a magicJack user and are simply making calls to other users. However, if you are a current customer and want to make calls to landline and mobile numbers, you have to pay a small license fee of 10 dollars. If you are a new user you will have to pay the standard of 40 dollars for the first year of service with all years that only cost 20 dollars each. The magicJack plus is supposed to be released in early July with reports claiming that the magicApp should be released at the same time or close. The initial version should only cover computers, all iOS devices, including iPhone and Ipad Ipad an Android, Windows Phone and Blackberry compatible App coming soon. Sale Leave your review
