I haven't tested this approach yet, but as far as I know, all you have to do is install the app, launch it and install the update.

There should be a log in box in the menu somewhere that says 'update'. Lijo Comments I dont know much about this story but I think its a fake hoax. 1) There is no "0.1.3" version of Kaspersky Internet Security Premium 2011. 2) There is no known serial key for that version. 3) There is a "0.1.2" version of Kaspersky Internet Security Premium 2011 and a known serial key for that version. Sorry but this looks like a fake.. I don't know much about this story but I think it's a hoax. I downloaded the software just now and I get the same message. Which is the same as the first post... Thanks, we will need the 0.1.2 serial key. The version number 0.1.3.00 is reserved for future releases. I don't think that the second part of the message is displayed because there is no known serial key for the version 0.1.3.00 (sorry for this term). The question you need to ask is whether there is a valid serial key for the version number 0.1.2.00. I have the same problem. Tried everything, but Kaspersky antivirus doesn't accept a serial key. The only thing it offers is the option to generate a new one. Even if I try to create a new key, it doesn't work. Hi, I have the same problem.
