What should I do? Is there any way to solve this problem? A: Solve the following first, the other may be related: Download the correct version for your system. You have an incorrect installation (XE2) or an installation directory with different permissions. STATIONERS Would you like to hear a little more about the need for Stationers as a viable profession? Stationers are one of the most versatile of all craftsmen. A stationer can do just about anything from production work (calling, letterpress, lithography, or bookbinding), to linocut printing, to photography, to frame design, and even to music. Stationers work in offices, at the stationery counter, or with clients in a gallery or retail outlet. They are employed by both private and public sector organizations, and by educational institutions, churches, and the like. Some stationers work in production facilities, and others work from home. There are other terms you may hear for what is commonly called a stationer. The term "office pressman" is now outdated, since it was superseded by "offset pressman". However, the term "lino cutter" is still in common usage, as it is a useful term to describe a certain kind of person. When it comes to the term "pressman", this is becoming a bit of a misnomer as well. There are plenty of people around who could be called a "pressman", but are not printing press operators, and perhaps should not be referred to as such. They are traditionally called "office pressmen", but a great many are (and should be) classified as the more precise "postpressmen". (The term "postpressman" was not in common use when I learned it, but it is a useful term for those who wish to do more than just cut some linoleum blocks.) With this in mind, I would like to suggest that in this blog, whenever I use the term "stationer", it should be understood to refer to a "stationery" printer. If I use the term "postpressman", it should be understood that I am referring to a postpressman, not an office pressman. And in the interests of better defining the scope of this blog, I will use the term "postpressman" for printing or web design. In other words, a postpress 520fdb1ae7
