Kagan and her human side falls in love with Sebastian.

I almost forgot that I had seen this a month ago. I remember being excited more for the fact that Uwe Boll was in attendance so I could hear what he had to say about film-making. Well, Blood Rain say his comments before and after the movie are revelations as to why he makes such crappy films. First off, he can't grasp why people savage his movies so much. He feels that the internet community gives him a hard time because he's German Blood Rain he makes his movies with Nazi money his quote, not mine.

Blood Rain course, he was joking, right? Secondly, he couldn't care less if the actors he has are right for the roles. In fact, finding actors is his last thing he does to secure financing for his films. Apparently, he thinks the story is strong enough to carry the film. So, this is why we end up with actors like Ben Kingsley working alongside Michael Madsen. Really, the only thing they had was the time to do the movie and the earning of Blood Rain paycheck.

So, if this doesn't strike you as soulless film-making, I don't know what does. In essence, by waiting until the last possible moment to hire actors, he Blood Rain make his movies with a secured budget. The reason why Blood Rain write this is because I heard his new "epic" In the Name of the King will be a four hour film split in half like Kill Bill.

This depressed me to no end. Looking for something to watch? Choose an adventure below and discover your next favorite movie or TV show. Visit our What to Watch page. Sign In. Keep track of everything you watch; tell your friends.
