At the first game of the series released for the Nintendo 64 and N-Gage, Target Deer features added realism with accurate hunting simulation, and enables online competition by using the Gameboy Advanced's Internet-like connectivity (via the Pal casino game, as well as two later games, Silvers & Spades and The Card Shark). The game also includes a manual reloading feature, instead of the automatic feature found in many deer hunting games. Along with realistic simulation, Target Deer also features full compatibility with Gameboy Advanced games. Reception Target Deer received generally positive reviews from critics. IGN gave the Game Boy Advance version a 7 out of 10, calling it "an excellent deer hunting simulator on the Game Boy Advance that also includes online play and a built in Gameboy Link Cable". IGN gave the N64 version a 2.5 out of 10, calling it "A fairly clunky multiplayer hunting game that has some decent visuals but none of the Gamecube's unique features". GameSpot gave the N64 version a 4 out of 10, calling it "a great hunting game on the Gamecube, but has very little of the Gamecube's features, such as online play, game linking, and greater customization 520fdb1ae7
