While last year's version was an overall improvement over its previous incarnations, our review staff eventually concluded that there is still some maturing to do if Lavasoft seeks to reclaim the throne as the top security honcho. Gone is the Vipre scanner that fed it before, and Ad-Aware now comes mostly powered by the main Bitdefender safety engine and with additional perks and utilities. The installation process isn't exactly short when you turn on the extra download time to capture the definition of the virus, but it's not unbearable. Like many other security programs before it, Ad-Aware comes complete with in-house toolbars; But before you go to giggle in disgust, it's actually a surprisingly useful utility. The toolbar add-on is one of the least unpleasant things we've ever used among browser packages. Granted most toolbars are a hindrance, but the Ad-Aware security toolbar actually provided some value. In fact, we'd even go so far as to recommend it if you find yourself constantly trying to remove unintentional toolbar installations and BHO add-ons that mysteriously appear inside your browser. The Ad-Aware toolbar comes with three main features: a built-in search that is powered by Yahoo!, a web profile that indicates if the page is safe to visit... and removing the toolbar. No matter what browsers you install, the tool actually identifies all third-party toolbars installed in the three main browsers (Chrome, Firefox, IE). Not only will it guide you through the removal/removal process, but the Ad-Aware security panel will take you directly to the dashboard to help you remove the other remaining dependencies. The overall menu is cleaner, with thinner fonts and a sharply streamlined menu layout, providing a general more enjoyable experience that gives you a little more room to breathe. The bottom pull up shows only the basic components and keeps unnecessary social widgets neatly hidden. The whole overall look is almost Webapp-like. Gone are the past Interface: Instead of Ad-Aware 11 supports a permanent left panel for quick access. All his tools are still there, but only much more neatly organized within their categories. The Av-TEST Institute has not published separate reports for the Ad-Aware 11 yet, but according to the latest August Real-World Protection Test, Bitdefender scored a high level of protection at 100 percent, with Trend Micro being the only competitor to match. Since then, Lavasoft has also stated even more impressive findings based on their own internal assessments, but we need to see that these tests are confirmed as the product becomes more widely distributed. The full scan took about 19 minutes and 12 seconds on our test machine, and Ad-Aware provides a standard trio of fast, complete and custom scanning options. The download and off performance were initially impacted, clocking in at a total of 90.82 seconds to load and 13 seconds to turn off. However, the Ad-Aware 11 also takes some time to adjust to your system and of course the download time on and off stabilized for the second and third time, clocking an average of 44.75 seconds and 9.04 seconds, respectively. Bottom line: Ad-Aware 11 represents a huge comeback for Lavasoft and has responded largely to all our criticisms from last year's review. The impact of the system, scanning efficiency and design have been improved across the board, and prices are set competitively. If you're still on the fence about what kind of free security kit to install, then you can give this a try.
