Over 300 people in the region had been affected by it. It was a genetic condition and affected people in different ways. Some people had difficulty breathing, while others had skin discoloration. The condition was caused by a mutation in a gene that controls the production of an enzyme called diaphorase. This enzyme is responsible for converting methemoglobin back to hemoglobin. Without diaphorase, methemoglobin accumulates in the blood, giving it a bluish tint. The condition is rare and was only found in a few isolated communities. Many people with the condition were stigmatized and discriminated against. The people of troublesome creek were no different. They had been living with the condition for generations and had come to accept it as part of their identity. However, with the advent of modern medicine, the condition could be treated with the drug dapsone. Many people with the condition were able to lead normal lives and were no longer stigmatized.
