There is solitude at the top and being one of the rarest and most strategically capable personality types, architects know this very well. Architects cover only two per cent of the population, and women with this type of personality are particularly rare because they make up only 0.8 per cent of the population; it is often a challenge for them to find like-minded people who can keep up with their relentless intelligence and chess manoeuvres. People with an architect personality are creative but determined, ambitious but discreet, incredibly curious, but don't waste their energy. Nothing can stop the correct attitude from achieving its goal With the natural thirst for knowledge that manifests itself at an early age, architects often get the name of the library mouse as children. While this may be seen as an insult to his peers, they are likely to identify with him and even take pride in enjoying his deep and broad knowledge. Architects would also like to share what they know, confident in their mastery of selected topics, but these individuals prefer to design and execute a brilliant plan in their field rather than share opinions about disrespectful distractions like gossip. You have no right to an opinion. You have the right to an informed opinion. No one has the right to be ignorant. Harlan Ellison As a paradox for most observers, architects can live with obvious contradictions that nonetheless make sense, at least from a purely rational point of view. For example, architects are the same the most idealistic idealists and the most sour cynics, a conflict that may seem impossible. But that's because guys with an architect personality tend to believe that with effort, intelligence and attention, nothing is impossible, while at the same time believing that people are too lazy, short-sighted or selfish to really achieve fantastic results. However, this cynical view of reality is unlikely to stop an architect who wants to achieve a result he considers important. Basically, stand firm as rock architects radiate self-confidence and aura of mystery, and their interesting observations, original ideas and formidable logic can lead to change through willpower and personality strength. Sometimes it may seem that architects tend to dismantle and reconstruct all the ideas and systems with which they come into contact using a sense of perfectionism and even morality in this work. Anyone who has no talent to follow in the processes of architects, or worse, who does not see their meaning d'e miss, is likely to immediately and forever lose their respect. This should not be confused with impulsiveness, Architects will strive to remain rational, no matter how attractive can the ultimate goal be, and every idea, whether generated internally or absorbed from the outside world, must pass a ruthless and always present filter That will work? This mechanism applies at all times to all things and to all people, and this is where often people with an architect personality get into trouble. One reflects more when traveling alone architects are brilliant and rely on knowledge that took their time to understand, but unfortunately social consent is unlikely to be one of those issues. Pious lies and superficial conversations are hard enough for the type of person who craves truth and depth, but architects can get to the point of considering many social conventions to be frankly stupid. Ironically, it is often best for them to stay where they are comfortable, away from the spotlight, where the natural confidence that dominates architects when dealing with objects that are familiar to them can serve as their own beacon and attract people, romantic or not, temperament and similar interests. Architects are defined by their tendency to go through life as if they were giant chess, with parts that constantly change based on consideration and intelligence, always evaluating new tactics, strategies and contingency plans, dominando Con astucia sus colegas para mantener el control de una situaci'n, mientras maximizan su libertad para moverse. Premium Profile Rational - Architects are proud of their wit. For them, almost any situation can be an opportunity to expand their knowledge and hone their skills of rational thinking. Through this thinking, they can come up with inventive solutions to even the most difficult problems. Informed - Few personality types are as dedicated as architects for forming rational, evidence-based opinions. Instead of guessing or half-baked assumptions, they base their findings on research and analysis. This gives them the confidence that they have to defend their ideas, even in the face of disagreement. Independent - For these personality types, conformity is more or less synonymous with mediocrity. Creative and purposeful, Architects strive to do things their own way. They can imagine a few things more frustrating than allowing rules or conventions to stand in the way of their success. Defined - The Architect of Personalities is ambitious and purposeful. Whenever an idea or an aspiration captures their imagination, architects dedicate themselves to mastering the subject and learning the appropriate skills. They tend to have a clear idea of what it means to them to be successful, and there is little that can deter them from turning these visions into reality. Curiously - Architects are open to new ideas - as long as these ideas are rational and evidence-based, that is. Skeptical by nature, these personality types are particularly drawn to unusual or opposing points of view. They are even open to changing their opinions when the facts prove them wrong. Universal - Architects like to get involved in all sorts of problems. Their curiosity and determination can help people with this type of personality succeed in a wide range of endeavors. Arrogant - Architects may be knowledgeable, but they are not infallible. Their self-confidence can blind them to useful contributions from others - especially those they consider intellectually inferior. These individuals can also become unnecessarily harsh or purposeful in trying to prove others wrong. Disparaging emotions - For architects, the rationality of the king. But emotional context often matters more than with this personality type of care to recognize. Architects can get to get with everyone who seems to value feelings more than facts. Unfortunately, ignoring emotions is his own type of bias - one that can cloud architects' judgments. Excessively critical - These personalities tend to have a lot of self-control, especially when it comes to thoughts and feelings. When people in their lives fail to match their level of restraint, architects can become dramatically critical. But this criticism is often unfair, based on arbitrary standards, not on a full understanding of human nature. Combative - Architects hate blindly after nothing, not understanding why. This includes the limitations and powers of the persons who impose them. People with this type of personality can get caught up in disputes about useless rules and regulations - but sometimes these battles distract from more important issues. Romantic Clueless - Architects' relentless rationality can lead them to the disappointment of romance. Especially in the early stages of a relationship, they may struggle to understand what is going on and how to behave. And if their relationship falls apart for reasons they don't understand, they can become cynical about matters of the heart, even questioning the importance of love and connection.
