According to marathongps.com: The initial version of the TopoFrance maps, released in 2013, is a new data set, the topo-fr maps, that provides real-time road data. They are currently being updated for new roads and traffic-light changes, and can be used to help improve your route by highlighting problem areas. They include the full route, but exclude the segment to Le Lavandou, a peninsula in the South of France. However, it looks like you also have Garmins where the only difference is that one uses telemetry and the other uses GPX data. From the manual: GPS signals are sometimes not available when you drive on certain surfaces, such as asphalt and concrete, and even if you have a satellite fix, you may be unable to download the necessary data from satellites. In this case, telemetry data from the vehicle is used to overlay the corresponding GPX file on the map.

Telemetry data records the vehicle's position, speed, course, and revolutions per minute, and the Garmins 3 has GPS as well. The Garmins 2 does not have telemetry. There's also a comparison on the page that shows the Garmins 3 Pro GPS with a split screen showing the topo on one side and telemetry on the other, and they also note that the Garmins 2 is not GPS.
