New System Tray Notify is software which is the leading system tray notification and alternative to the system tray notification in software you are running. It is an optional component of VSCode that allows users to see when a piece of code is about to run. There is support for other editors including Vim, Sublime, Atom and Visual Studio. New System Tray Notify is software which is the leading system tray notification and alternative to the system tray notification in software you are running.

It is an optional component of VSCode that allows users to see when a piece of code is about to run. It also features a live preview pane that can show the results of your expression, and a plugin option that lets you add custom tooltips for snippets. Support for expressions in many other editors is coming in the future. This is the very first version of New System Tray Notify and it has some rough edges. To see a live preview of the results of your expression, tap the system tray area or middle mouse button. To see the results, toggle the New System Tray Notify console panel. When you need to see the results in the large preview pane, the Console panel must be toggled. (There are also a lot of bugs in this release, but they are pretty easy to fix.)

Below is a screenshot of the new console panel with the results of an expression visible. Use the Console panel to view the results of the expression, to view snippets, and to toggle the live preview. VSCode has a ton of features and is growing all the time. New System Tray Notify is a free add-on for VSCode and requires the extension VSCodeInsiders. You can get the VSCode extension for 520fdb1ae7
