The new legislation, which went into effect on Jan. 1, 2019, includes provisions that prevent private companies from selling driver's licences. "They are trying to send a message to all British Columbians that the BC government is issuing licences to immigrants, to asylum seekers, to anyone who doesn't have a legitimate basis to be driving in Canada," said lawyer Huan-Gang Tan. "That's what the B.C. government is trying to do. It's an attempt to be a little more proactive and proactive in law enforcement and prevent people who don't have a legitimate basis to be driving in Canada from driving." Tan filed a lawsuit in B.C. Supreme Court after the government issued a notice of intention to seek an injunction. "We don't think this is a fight worth fighting. We just want the government to sit down with us and come to a mutually beneficial deal," Tan said. Tan said his client, a registered nurse who had an expired licence, bought it privately from a company that has been in business for 20 years. He said the licensee did not know the licence was expired 520fdb1ae7
