Opening a mechanic's shop can be a rewarding profession, especially if you want to do something with your hand. People need their cars to get around, so they always need to keep them running smoothly if you want to open an automated store the right way, it's going to start a bit of time, some solid training and planning. You technically don't need any education to open a car shop, but your business will attract a certain amount of respect if your mechanics are certified by the National Institute for Automotive Service Excellence. Of course, you can always hire mechanics who followed that path, but the chances are that if you're interested in opening a mechanic shop, you're a mechanic yourself. To get an ASE certificate, you need two years of training at work. You can do some of this through formal training, such as a business school or community college, or you can fast track your route by taking a valid ASE certificate program. After two years of accumulated credit, you have to pass a written test and it is not the easiest. Only two-thirds of people pass the exam on their first attempt. It's true that you can succeed as a general mechanic all around, but shops that specialize can actually bring in more customers if they play it smart. Maybe you live in an area with very congested highways and confusing off. Don't you want to open a mechanic shop that specializes in collisions in an area where collisions are likely to happen? Or you might notice there are few shops that specialize in transport in the area. Can you fill this hole? With ASE certification, you can choose a specialty from specific car manufacturers for things like truck equipment, heavy machinery and collision repair. If you want to open an automated store, know that the location is everything. Your company probably won't succeed if you choose to set up your own business in an area with a few cars or where few people drive. For example, a mechanic who opens a shop on BaldHead Island in North Carolina will surely fail unless it's in the golf cart business because the island doesn't allow cars. For a traditional mechanic shop, a place near a highway or where people regularly break is your best bet. Also make sure you have enough space for all the lifts you need and park customer cars. Opening automated shops is not cheap. You are most likely going to spend about $4,000 per year on each lift and $4,000 on related insurance. Your tool can cost about $15,000 just to get started, and a detection machine alone is $5,000 to $10,000. With all the startup costs, you can spend about $25,000 to $75,000 just to open your shop, and that could skyrocket if you buy your lot instead of renting it out. Overall, that's not much compared to most businesses, but it's certainly not a small chunk of change. If you have this kind of budget, you may want to consider approaching a bank or running a small business for loans. Make sure you have a solid business plan in place to get the best absolute rates. Every business must run through the same legal hoops. You need to form a legitimate business entity (LLC, S Corp, etc.), sign up with the IRS and get an employer identification number so you can pay taxes. You also need to obtain a business license from your local government and get the insurance required. For a car shop, you will need a public liability scheme, but if you plan to hire employees, you will also need workers compensation. Automatic commercial insurance is not required, but it's a good idea. It protects your company if any of your employees have an accident while driving the customer's car around most of you. After receiving the right insurance, you can start hiring employees. Automated shops generally make most of their money from 10 popular services that average at $144.10 per job. This includes: Oil and Loeb (which accounts for about 20 jobs per week on average) aligns the diagnostic service A/C repair recycling/electronic charging engine control service emissions control service spark plug replacement alternating repair and replacement to make sure your prices remain competitive. A/C services generally rake in most averages $276 per job. Brake services come in second at an average of $223 per job. Oil and lobe are the cheapest on average $30 per job. An automated shop won't succeed, Ehly. Also consider contacting towing companies and giving them incentives to refer customers because they are, after all, dealing with broken cars. Vouchers for discounted services, such as $10 oil changes, will help replicate new customers who may become customers.
