GIVING IT BACK...PASSING IT ON: A Teacher's Tool
SERVICE LEARNING IN YOUR CLASSROOM

3 FIVE KEY STEPS FOR A SUCCESSFUL SERVICE-LEARNING PROJECT

1) Investigate & Research

- Identify a topic or issue:
  - What curriculum goals do you need to meet with your class?
  - What are you already teaching that has a local application?
  - How can you make researching your topic part of the project for your students? (e.g. creating a database, survey, webpage, map or literary review)
- Identify a Community Partner:
  - Who is already doing work locally that relates to your material?
  - What activities can you and your partner agree on that generally advance the community group's work and mission?
  - What will success look like for you? For your community partner?
  - How will you and your partner work together and what will you accomplish?
  - What can you realistically contribute with the time and resources you have?

2) Plan and Prepare

- What do your students need to know in advance to understand what they will see and hear onsite?
- Can your community partner come into the classroom to provide some preparation or training?
- What historical context or theoretical underpinnings can you provide for your students in advance?

3) Take Action

- How can you structure the day and your assessment tools so that your students are keeping their own records of their experiences on site?
- Are your students clear about their role and shared goals for the day?
- How will you collect your own observations for student assessment?

4) Reflect on the Experience

- How will your students privately reflect on this experience? (e.g. journal entries, writing prompts)
- How will your students reflect together as a group? (e.g. small group discussion, large group presentations, storytelling)
- How else will you guide your students to find meaning and connection to their school, their local community, and to the world?
- How do these reflections circle back to and advance your curriculum goals?
