As the last mistake of a tailor should get it fixed so that the game doesn't become the soft core of TRIBBLE. Oh I took a screenshot as well, in case you were wondering what it looked like. A post edited by czarcastic on January 20150 as part of the Community Platform Unified Platform project, your wiki will be moved to a new platform in the next few weeks. Read more here. From Star Trek Online to Wiki Share Video the main focus in monetization in STO is really selling ships, dilithiums, keys and services. There aren't really many good outfits added to the store, and I think the focus of zen-race sales has been in the wrong place. What's good out there now is some races can get specific traits if they're given attention, like cardassians and jems.but where the logic in locking in so many possible character-creation options for most players?a few years ago was a mistake in the tailor that allowed players to take items from a comprehensive pool. this means that sometimes you will see xindi reptile player, for example, but even alien race players can not take these cosmetics.this practice will also drive up the demand for lobi crystals and outfit slots, since people will be able to more easily create themed outfits around races like xindi reptilians. Suggestion: since cosmetics are quite profitable nowadays, put in a service account that does not open everything that doesn't exist in your account. this will include blocked head types, skin types and organic head attachments that even aliens can't get without a tailor bug like the xindi reptile. Cstore races will still be valuable because of their features and blocked customization items like JHV hair. You can charge through the nose for this service, and people will still pay it!Suggestion: add outfits to the next lockbox, vanity leather in a arms pack and vanity skin, like the ultra rare of lockbox, and put a few more affordable pieces in the store. Some updated, high quality sunglasses or a good hat will sell very well. I'm trying to get Terrans guerrilla armor in choosing an outfit, but it appears instead. Has anyone been able to get Lorca's jacket to show off on their character? Page 2 10 comments
