Thankfully, there are sculpture gardens and art parks full of art across the country, some attached to larger indoor museums, some fully focused on outdoor experiences. Ally in cities, many are in more rural surroundings, giving acres of wide open space in nature. Here are the top 15 outdoor sculpture gardens in the U.S. worth visiting. 01 of 15 Wendy Stone / Getty Images Just over an hourThere are 500 acres of outdoor space dedicated to large, modern sculptural art north of New York City. Storm King features rolling hills, lush forests, grasslands, glass ponds and bubbling streams, with modern sculptures dotting the landscape. Sculptures by artists such as Henry Moore, Andy Goldsworthy, Sol LeWitt, Alexander Calder, Louise Bourgeois and Tomio Miki are spread out, and several works are incorporated directly into the landscape, like Maya Lynn's undulating Wavefield. Some areas have large permanent collections (more than 100) and rotating sculptures. The site is so large that be prepared for a lot of walking. 02 of 15, still in Washington, D. Despite being believed to be on the outskirts of C, we expect to drive through some farmland before arriving in Glenstone. The nearly 300-acre space, which began in 2006 with a single building of indoor art, expanded to a large sculpture garden and several buildings at the end of 2018. Visitors will be guided along multiple carefully beautiful paths, strategically arranged along the way, through forests, along streams and across meadows filled with flowers, with highly curated selections of 20th and 21st century artworks. Jeff Koons's giant split rocker covered in flowers is hard to miss, but look out for three Andy Goldsworthy structures, two looming Richard Serra metalwork sculptures and Tony Smith's creeping spider-like aluminium smudge. The architecture of the building, which houses the indoor collection, is a carefully placed reflective pool that rises from the grounds like a work of art itself. If you can make it indoors, you're going to catch the pieces by Bryce Marden, Cy Twombly, Roni Horne, Lorna Simpson and more. Located in New Orleans City Park, 03 courtesy of New Orleans & Company, Sydney and Walda Besthof Sculpture Garden, part of the New Orleans Museum of Art, more than doubled its size in 2019. The garden now has more than 90 sculptures set among the unique Gulf vegetation. Contemporary commissioned works by artists such as Jeppe Hein and Teresita Fernandez are inspired by the surroundings of tree canacles, wide lawns, the Island of TheOnoki and a two-acre lagoon, all connected by footbridges designed to complement the landscape. Some works, like Catalina Frich's Schaedel (Skull) and Kenneth S nelson's Vine Tower, are placed in the water, and Erin Zimmerman's Mississippi Mearns is a tempered glass bridge across the lagoon. Jean-Michel Otniel's Raible au Colliers is also on site, with glass and stainless steel strands hung on live oak trees. 04 of New England's largest outdoor art venue 15, DeKoldova is about 20 miles west of Boston and sits on collector Julian's 30-acre former estateThe two Elizabeth de Cordova donated their property to the city of Lincoln as long as it would become a public museum. Today, in the sculpture garden in the woodlands of Flint Pond, there are works by Nam June Pike, Andy Goldsworthy, Jaume Prensà, Dorothy Denner and Ursula von Riddingswald. Get in touch with Paul Matisse's Musical Fences and try to pose in front of Jim Dwyne's Two Big Black Hearts. About 60 sculptures and a small indoor museum are displayed outdoors. Followed by 5 of 15 below. 05/Getty Images The sprawling Newfields campus of 15 Indianapolis Museum of Art in Newfields features the Indianapolis Museum of Art, Lily House and this 100-acre sculpture park with walking and cycling trails and lakes. Most of the work encourages interactions like Atelier Van Le Shout's iconic Funky Bones (made up of 20 fiberglass benches that look like skeletons from a distance) and Vision Division's Chop Stick, an interactive playground made from fallen trees. The Newfields campus also has a formal garden and beer garden, so it's easy to spend the day here. 15 Richard Cummins/Getty Images The 105-acre park, which has been open to the public since 1976, blends nature and art about 15 miles west of downtown St. Louis. Visitors can explore multiple trails and see Tony Tasset's 38-foot-tall Eyes, Beverly Pepper's tent-like Alpha, Steve Tobin's Walking Roots, Donald Judd's concrete Untitled (1984), Jackie Ferrara's site-specific Laumeier Project and several works by Ernest Trova, who began donating the first of 40 works. 15 Richard Cummins/Getty Images 15's 07 opened by the Seattle Museum of Art in 2007 in a former industrial area along the Elliott Bay waterfront, and this nine-acre park is now the city's largest green space. Views of Pughe Sound and the Olympic Mountains provide a stunning backdrop for 20 works of art. Visitors can meander down the zigzag path and see the work of Louise Nevelson, Ginny Loughner, Roy McMakin, Ellsworth Kelly, Mark Di Sverro, and one of Jaume Prensà's giant heads. Created through a partnership between the Walker Art Center and the Minneapolis Park & Recreation Board, 15 Raymond Boyd/Getty Images 08, this 11-acre park opened in 1988 adjacent to the museum. There are some of the world's most famous sculptures, including Claes Oldenburg's iconic Spoonbridge and Cherry and Kushe van Bruggen. Other famous works include Alexander Calder's Spinner, Roy Liechtenstein's Salute to Painting, James Turrell's Skye Peshier, 2005 and Kiki Smith's Gougar. In the summer of 2019, the garden announced the latest additions by local artists, Tukumba T. Aiken, Rosemary Soini Vinel Guyton and Zaitu Jones.Follow 9 of 15 below Crosshair Shadow. 15 Raymond Boyd/Getty Images 09 In 1986, the Hall Family Foundation acquired 57 by Henry Moore and scored another 10 in 1989. In 1992, the foundation launched a contemporary sculpture initiative, adding works such as the famous Claes Oldenburg and kushe van Bruggen site-specific Shuttletcocks, and in 1996 the foundation donated all 84 acquisitions to the Nelson Atkins Museum in Kansas City. The 22-acre park, close to the museum, includes Magdalena Abakanovic's Standing Figures (30 Figures), Roxy Payne's Fermentation and Robert Morris's Labyrinth of Glass, a committee commemorating the park's 25th anniversary. 15 Robert Alexander/Getty Images Small but sculptural gardens belonging to the National Gallery contain iconic works of some of the world's greatest sculptors. Claes Oldenburg and Kushe van Bruggen's Typewriter Eraser, Sol LeWitt's Four-Sided Pyramid, Louise Bourgeois's Spider, Robert Indiana's Amor, Roy Richtenstein's House I, Roxy Payne's Graft Interestingly, the 10% 17-foot mosaic, such as Marc Chagall's Orphean, also features one of the entrances to French architect Hector Guimard's original Art Nouveau Paris Metro, made of cast iron in 1913 and restored by the museum. 15 of 11 Storm King in New York get a lot of recognition, but this outdoor art park is worth a trip north as well. Art Omi is spread over 300 acres of open fields and forests in the Hudson Valley. There are more than 60 works of art and architectural works, including sculptures by Oliver Cruz, Tony Tasset, Donald Lipsky, Beverly Pepper, DeWitt Godfrey and Will Lyman. Another part of the park is devoted to architecture, which facilitates projects by architects exploring the intersection of architecture, art and landscape, including works by Princeton University architecture professor Cameron Wu and Stephen Hall of Stephen Hall Architects. There are about 70 modern sculptures spread across this 5-acre sculpture garden on the grounds of the University of California, Los Angeles, including four bronze bas-reliefs by 15 courtesy 12 Henri Matisse of the Hammer Museum. Overseen by the Hammer Museum, the collection consists mainly of 20th-century works, with the exception of 2006 Richard

Serra curved steel. Artists such as Auguste Rodin, Hans Aalp, Joan Miró, Anna Mahler and Isamu Noguchi, whose sculptures cross between lawns and perfectly placed trees. Followed by 13 of 15 below. 13 of 15 are best known for Frank Lloyd Wright's house, which is open to the public (tour only)Nobu also has a modern sculpture collection with works placed around the house and in the surrounding forest. There are more than 30 works, including one of Andy Goldsworthy's early commissions, works by Anthony Caro, Wendy Taylor, David Nash and Philip King. Frank Lloyd Wright's Falling Waterhouse is also nearby. 14/Getty Images of 15 Bauhaus 1000 The lush 9,100 acres of Brook Green Gardens near Myrtle Beach contain one of the most important collections of outdoor figurative sculptures by American artists from around the world. The land is also a wildlife sanctuary and includes a low country zoo and several themed gardens. It used to be the site of four rice cultivations. Archer and Anna Hyatt Huntington of Connecticut purchased a plantation to create a garden displaying Anna's sculptures. When it opened as a public garden in 1932, it was the first public sculpture garden in the country. Today, there are more than 2,000 works by Anna Huntington, Carl Gruppe, Cornelia Van Orken Chapin, Edith Howland, Donald de Roux, Marion Sanford and Augustus San Gorden. The Lowcountry Trail features rice fields restored from the plantation, four archaeological structural sites of the time, and panels describing slave life on the plantation. The 15 courtesy of 15 Nathan Manilow Sculpture Park is affectionately called Nate, and this art park, about 40 miles south of Chicago, contains 30 large sculptures spread across a 100-acre prairie landscape. You've seen works such as Tony Tassett's first major work, the 30-foot-tall woodjack Paul, Bruce Naumann's House Divide, James Brenner's twisted Passage and the Bodark Ark set by artist Martin Puryear on the land itself. It is so large that it can only be seen completely from the air. Air.
