1.9 The Canadian Military: Beyond the Physical So you're interested in a military career in Canada. That's great! There are a few things you should know about the Canadian military though. Let's talk about why you might want to join, some of the training and what it takes to become a Canadian soldier. What you need to know You must be a Canadian citizen to apply for a Canadian military job. If you don't have Canadian citizenship, you must apply to a Canadian Embassy or consulate. If you can't complete the citizenship requirements by age 21, you must ask your parents to apply for citizenship for you. You must be eligible to work in Canada. It's different for a youth to work in the military, compared to adult Canadian citizen military personnel. What to expect You'll be told you're eligible for the military at age 18. If you're a female and/or if you're from a minority group in Canada, you may be asked to complete an additional 'special requirements' form. After you've applied, you may be called for a medical exam. The Canadian military is very well known for the skills and abilities it takes to be a soldier. They must be smart, loyal, fair, and ready to work long hours. Physical training is important. Once you join you'll be in training for at least six months. Military school is two years long, and you'll take your physical fitness test at the end of the second year. If you pass your physical fitness test, you'll be assigned to a military unit. Each branch of the Canadian military has their own training rules. Let's talk about the army. The army The Canadian army was formed in 1968 by the unification of the army of the United Kingdom and the army of Canada. The Canadian Army has always been known for their unique way of learning and their willingness to adapt. Today they train to be one of the best armed forces in the world. There are five branches of the Canadian military, each with their own unique characteristics. Let's talk about the army. Enlistment There are a few different places you can enlist for the army in Canada. The most common is to enlist through a high school. 520fdb1ae7
