The driver name is displayed along with the version and date it was installed. If a driver is obsolete, the program shows an exclamation mark to that driver, and a link to the manufacturer's website or support pages is displayed. If no driver is installed, an empty entry is shown. In order to install a driver, the user needs to first select the device to which the driver should be installed, and then the destination for the driver to be installed. If the driver needs to be updated, the user needs to select the driver in the list, and then select the update option. If the required driver is not found in the list, the user may choose a driver from the top section of the list, or click on the Search for a driver button. Settings Users can specify whether the driver is to be auto-installed or not, how often the driver is to be auto-updated, and a time-limit for auto-update. The user can also specify to always update drivers automatically, or to only update drivers when requested by the operating system. The time-limit feature allows the user to specify a maximum date for updating the drivers. The maximum update time-limit is measured in days, hours, minutes, seconds and milliseconds.
