Eid al-Fitr is an important date for Muslims around the world to herald the end of Ramadan. On the eve of Ramadan's 30th day, the moon's witness committee meets again and begins to look for a glimpse of the new three-day moon. When they find the new moon, the next morning will be announced as the first day of Showar - Eid al-Fitr. When is Eid al-Fitr in 2019? This year's Ramadan began on May 6 in most Muslim countries. In other words, Eid al-Fitr, translated from Arabic into Feast to Break Fasting, is likely to begin on Tuesday, June 4 or Wednesday, June 5. The United Arab Emirates formed a monthly eyewitness committee on Monday, June 3, to begin searching for evidence of a new monthly cycle. If they find the new moon, Eid al-Fitr will start the next day. Otherwise, Eid starts on Wednesday instead - Ramadan has been going on for 30 days. According to a list of holidays announced by the United Arab Emirates Cabinet this year and next, Eid's holiday begins on the 29th day of Ramadan and lasts until Showar 3. Private sector eid holidays begin on Monday, June 3, lasting four days regardless of when Eid falls, and the public sector has been confirmed to take a five-day vacation from Sunday, June 2. Update: The Government of the United Arab Emirates announces the holidays of Eid al-Fiter for public and private sector workers. Last year, Eid fell on Friday and the public sector was given a holiday on Thursday and next Sunday. The private sector resumed work on Sunday. But the holidays are unified across two sectors, the government said earlier this year. During Eid, Muslims are recommended to visit family and friends in new clothes and exchange greetings with all the people they come across. Celebrations usually last for three days, and these days it has become common to travel and perform extracurrccurred activities using Eid holidays.
