From the match barrel to the beveled magwell, you know you found something special. Tactical Tupperware may be the way of the future, but the ergonomics and sharp trigger of 1911 cannot be disputed. Maybe it's the handsome lines browning designed or the soothing heft of the steel frame in his hand, but nevertheless it's hard to be a man of handguns and not appreciate 1911. Fortunately, appreciating a classic doesn't require ignoring evolution. Since 1911, there have been more than 100 years of development in the design and manufacturing sector. The absolutist may try to ignore them, but modern 1911 doesn't have to be unreliable, in the chamber .45acp or even a single stack. Metro Arms craftsmen understand this and have created a work admired in the selection of local competition or on the famous podium. The American Classic XB is suitable for 17+1 revolutions 9 mm for hand-mounted 1911. Watch the video below for craftsmanship. For those who love cannons by numbers, the specifications listed below are taken directly from the product's website. Caliber 9mm Operation SA Capacity 17 + 1 barrel length 5 Front sight Mil-Spec Rear sight dovetail finishes Blue grips Aluminum structure 4140 Steel frame / 4140 Hammer forged Steel slide safety Atmospheric thumb safety / Beavertail Weight 39.40 Length 8.40 Height 5.40 Width 1.50 As shown in the video, XB is very well done. The fit is tight and accurate, and I bet the shooting is too. I'm about to get XB in range for the usual tests. For those unfamiliar with GBGuns, the process starts with a full clip +1 to ensure essential reliability, then I perform various loads through the weapon. Between bullet profiles, ammo weights, powder mixtures and enclosure materials, not all ammunition works well in all cannons. What's for dinner? The purpose of the test is to identify what the weapon eats and what it does not eat. After that, a fast field Test with nosler match ammunition, which is actually more where I collect thoughts about a gun than it is a weapon test. If you don't know the fear of American Classic, don't. This is the same company that produces amazing Metro Arms Bobcut, SPS Pantera and Llama Micromax.
