Study of sociology (1897) (in French: Le suicide. Etude de sociocorie) is one of the most important works of the French sociologist Emile Durkheim who deals with suicide as a social phenomenon. This breaks the traditional tendency to regard it as a strictly individual phenomenon and therefore only as an object of psychology or morality. Durkheim begins his work by noting the need for the terms used by researchers to be scientifically defined and not without criticism taken from vulgar use. Words, as commonly used, are usually ambiguous in their meaning and, as they result from an unconscious classification produced by confused impressions, do not reflect the true nature of things. This proves that essentially different things are called with the same term, while the related things are defined by different names. A scientific classification will be through a methodical and conscious analysis, adapt the terms to reality: that relevant and comparable things are gathered under the same condition (for the scientist explains by comparison) while those that are not are also differentiated from language. Durkheim's definition of suicide is as follows: Any case of death resulting directly or indirectly from a positive or negative act performed by the victim, he or she or she or she, is called suicide in the light of that result. It is clear that suicides are not a monstrosity alien to any normal behavior: It is nothing more than the excessive form of normal practices, common practices that differ only from suicide from a degree issue consistent only in that the certainty of death is less: If one person knowingly exposes his life to another, But without a mortal outcome to be certain, it is not by the way suicidal, or even if he died, nor is he the reckless one who plays decisively with death, even trying to avoid it, or the apathy that, because he is not strongly attached to anything, does not take on the job of caring for his health and commits his negligence. Now, in these cases, the whole difference [with suicides] is that the chances of death are lower than ----- product shipment the available option is Mercadoenvios, the shipping cost can be calculated where it says Shipments below the price of product.-----ACORDAR WITH SOLD ... We owe Durkheim the first attempt to unite sociological theory and empirical research, to turn sociology into science. As a result of this work, his most important work, Suicide published for the first time in our country, shows his method. In this study, Durkheim tries to prove, by applying the comparative method, and after determining what he means by suicide, that its causes lie in social phenomena rather than individual reasons. For the father of modern sociology, the social structure is always above the individual and defines it. The degree of lawlessness - the lack of coherence in a particular group that exists in society explains suicide rates. His study, published in 1897 and set in the late nineteenth century, seeks for the first time the effect on suicide of extrasocial causes, to determine and clarify what the social element of suicide consists of. Thus, it concludes that it varies with reverse logic in the degree of coherence of society in both its religious, family and political aspects, that there are various types of suicide, whose moral and social importance is not the same, and that the high rates of the time are indicative of the prevailing moral misery. Moraist, as well as Durkheim criticises suicide and proposes, at the end of his study, a series of solutions to restore social harmony. ----- This product belongs to the official store of SBS Bookstores, one of the most important companies in our country dedicated to the marketing of books, where you can buy all our products quickly, safely and to the highest standards of a guaranteed service that has the best quality metrics of Mercado Libre.
