Our focus is on the social order that is under constant threat of collapsing as soon as the mood of homoeroticism in relation to the female changes. When we use the term lesbian, we refer to any woman who doesn't have any ties to men whatsoever. In this paper, the term "lesbian" was used to refer to any women who are not heterosexual. This book explores the emergence of lesbian culture and women's clubs in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The study is based on material collected by the author from both private archives and public libraries and on a six-month survey of lesbian culture conducted among gay male and female respondents. The following findings emerged from the study. (1) First, the study revealed that most of the "lesbian" women in the nineteenth century were organized into "women's clubs," or "clubs for women only" in the 1920s. (2) Second, the study found that the first lesbian women's clubs emerged in the 1860s and 1870s and were founded by upper-class women of liberal views, who were disturbed by the conservative mood in the late nineteenth century. These clubs were called "the Woman's Alliance for the Right to be Intellectual" or "Woman's Alliance" in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. (3) Third, the study revealed that the first lesbian women's clubs were created in response to the conservative mood in the late nineteenth century. (4) Fourth, the study found that the first lesbian women's clubs were created by middle-class and upper-class women in the 1870s and 1880s, and they represented a new way for women to express themselves in social and political settings. (5) Fifth, the study found that the first lesbian clubs were located in New York and Chicago in the 1870s and 1880s. (6) Finally, the study revealed that the clubs that emerged in the 1920s were organized around the topics of poetry, literature, and art.#!/usr/bin/env python #-- coding: utf-8 --
