Crime scene investigation box

Inside the Box is the twenty-third episode and season three finale of CSI: Crime Scene Investigation. Synopsis Grissom and his team are to investigate the death of one of them in a bank robbery. For Catherine, the case becomes very personal when her friend Sam Braun is brought into the investigation. Meanwhile, Grissom's hearing interferes with his work and he finally takes a step to counter it. Plot Victim: Cyrus Lockwood (deceased) On the case: Whole team At First Monument Bank, Det. Cyrus Lockwood is online to make a transaction. A young boy standing with his mother sees Det. Lockwood's license plate and smiles. Suddenly, a group of armed masked men enter the bank. They make all the patrons line up against a wall, while a member has the bank manager lead him to the safe where the safe boxes are. He puts loads on certain boxes and detonates the charges. In the lobby, Det. Lockwood pulls up his gun from the men and gets shot in the back. When the police arrive, they are ambushed by gunfire from an invisible location. Grissom arrives at the bank and is soon met by Catherine. His hearing causes another problem, because he can not hear the sound of the alarm or Catherine speak to him. The enter the bank and see Brass and David Phillips crouched over the body of Det. Lockwood. Brass informs Catherine and Grissom that Det. Lockwood was shot to protect a woman and child. David says he only sees one bullet wound through the back, and Brass says this matches the witnesses' statements. Grissom walks to one of the front windows and sees evidence that the shot was fired from outside the bank. Brass tells them the robbers weren't interested in money and leads them to the safe. In the safe, Grissom sees the pattern in which the charges were placed, leading Catherine to suspect that the robbers knew exactly what they were looking for. Grissom notes that thanks to the precision of the robbers, the focus of the CSI team can be reduced. Nick, Sara and Warrick go into the bank to help while Grissom contemplates, his hearing is muted again. Every member of the team, except Catherine, chooses an area to process - Grissom and Sara go to the vault, Nick goes outside to process the shot police car and Warrick is on the cameras. Warrick finds a black substance covering the camera lens, but Catherine tells him to grab the security tapes anyway. Brass interrupts and says they found the getaway car; The driver is dead. On the floor in the vault, Grissom finds an electric blasting cap and thinks the robbers may have used C-4. He and Sara believe what the robbers were looking for was in the middle of the explosion. Grissom finds the detonator on the ground. Outside the bank, Nick tells Catherine that the police car was shot twice in the bonnet and once in the windshield with with powerful long-range weapon. Catherine says she'll take one of the bullets to process them. Catherine and Brass are going to the scene of the getaway car. The driver is almost decapitated inside, with the wire still used around his neck. Brass suspects that the driver became a liability after the job was done; He was killed and the other robbers escaped in another vehicle. At the autopsy, Doc Robbins pulls the bullet out of Det's body. Lockwood. Elsewhere, in front of the bank, Nick is able to pull one of the bullets under the hood of the police car. Meanwhile, back in the vault, Sara reconstructs the original layout of the lockers. In the AV lab, Grissom and Warrick look at the bank's security footage and see one of the robbers spray something on the camera. After lamenting the loss of Det. Lockwood, Warrick tells Grissom that the results of the black substance came back as camouflage cream. He suspects the robbers used the same stick on their face as on the camera. David Hodges found an eyelash in the cream. Doc Robbins personally brings the bullet drawn from Det. Lockwood to Grissom. Grissom comes by the print lab and tells Catherine they have the bullet. She responds by saying that they identified the getaway driver by the one through his fingerprints. The driver is Larry Whiting, whose criminal past includes assault and being drunk and disorderly. He was a clerk at the Rampart Casino, which Grissom notes is one of Sam Braun's casinos. Grissom says you need a non-gaming work card to park cars in a casino, so how did a criminal get one? They think Sam Braun is involved. Grissom tells Catherine to check it out, despite knowing her past history with Sam. Catherine meets Sam, who says he will have to talk to Human Resources because she is not supposed to process anyone with a criminal record. She tells him Larry Whiting was involved in the bank robbery, but the name doesn't ring a bell with Sam. Catherine doesn't believe this and tells the story of sam's childhood with an excuse that he was too tired to drive when he actually slept with Catherine's mother. She remembers Sam killing one of his waitresses a year earlier. Coupled with Larry Whiting's criminal past, things aren't good for Sam. Sam replies that he has a great public relations department that can bury a little bad press. Warrick and Brass go to Larry's apartment, where they find is valet uniform and his work card. Warrick also finds a liquor cup filled with money, as well as two $5,000 money bands from the Rampart Casino. In the ballistics lab, Bobby Dawson shows Grissom that the bullet that det. Lockwood and the bullet Nick retrieved from the police car came his same caliber (.308) and probably came from the same gun - an m1a. The m1a is a long gun and Bobby points out that long are only registered with the original buyer and the serial numbers are not registered. He tells Grissom that someone who is able to det. Lockwood and a speeding police car to take out, a lot of training should have. They think the shooter's in the army. In the bank, Nick puts on a doll with Det. Lockwood's jacket, complete with bullet wound. He fits the doll with a laser and secures it with the bullet hole in the window. Outside, he does the same thing with the hood of the police car. The lasers line up with a window in an office building across the street from the bank. Nick heads across the street and is able to locate the window from where the shots were fired. The windowsill tests negatively on gun shot residue; however, the top of a nearby chair tests positive. The shooter used the top of the chair to steady the gun during the shooting. Back in the bank vault, Sara reconstructed the layout of the lockers. She tells Catherine and Grissom that the outer boxes in the explosion sustained the most damage. The point was to preserve the sanctity of the middle box - box 729. This is the only box missing from the explosion and that box that the robbers were after. Grissom notes that they still don't know what was in that box. Catherine and Grissom are waiting for the bank manager. She starts talking to Grissom, but he can barely hear her. She asks him if he can hear her, but the bank manager comes before Grissom can answer. They tell the bank manager that they are interested in finding about box 729 and offer a court order when asked to do so. The bank manager calls up the information and finds that the box is Benny Murdock's, a name Catherine recognizes. Catherine pays Sam another visit, this time with Grissom in tow. Sam tells them that Benny Murdock was his first doorman at the Whiskey Town hotel and, a year later, he made him a casino host at Pike's Gambling Hall. Benny became Sam's right-hand man when the Rampart opened. Sam reveals that Benny died of a brain aneurysm a few weeks ago. When Catherine asks Sam if Larry Whiting knew Benny, he replies that everyone knew Benny. He even tells Catherine that Benny directed the whales Catherine's way when she was a dancer. She replies that that was Old Vegas and mentions that she heard Benny and Sam had an argument six months ago. Sam gets paged and interrupts the conversation. While Sam is away, Grissom sees a picture of the opening of the Rampart. Sam returns and refuses to answer questions about Benny, but says he and Benny made peace before he died. He ends the conversation after being told someone was cheating on one of the blackjack tables downstairs. In the lab, Catherine asks or he knows what off the record means. Greg says he does. Meanwhile, Grissom visits Doc Robbins for a second opinion on his After seeing how far Grissom's problem is, he recommends planning surgery as soon as possible. In the cafeteria, everyone sits around the table. Greg informs the group that he found DNA on the eyelash in the camouflage cream, but got no results. When Catherine Grissom asks what he thinks, Grissom says they give the robbers too much credit - they're bank robbers, not expert evidence concealers. He asks everyone if they know how a fortune cookie is made. Nick gives the answer and Grissom leaves the room with fortune cookie in hand to conduct an experiment. In the evidence room, Grissom dumps all the evidence and disassembles one of the external devices. It dusts the inside of the device on prints and can detect one. Jacqui Franco runs the print and it comes back to Rob Rubio, who has a non-gaming work card in the file. Robert is the head of security at rampart casino. Grissom has her take Robert's name through the military database and reveal an address. The police break down the door of Robert's house, but they can't find him inside. An officer tells Brass the house is empty, but something's burning in the backyard. Catherine, Grissom and Brass go to the backyard, where they find a black coat in the barbecue along with safe 729. Catherine pries the box open to reveal nothing inside except a piece of purple fabric. There are a number of spots in the box that test positive for blood. Brass gets the phone and tells Catherine and Grissom that Rob Rubio used to be a security expert in the military. Robert had been in some shady business before he went to work for Sam Braun. Brass notes that all the evidence seems to lead to Sam and the Rampart. In the desert, Sam gets out of his car with a briefcase in his hand. Another car comes up, and four people come out of it. Three of these people are the bank robbers. We then get to know a cut scene, where all three bank robbers are shot dead with Sam nowhere to be found. Catherine and Grissom meet Brass at the crime scene. Grissom notes that the victims where shot with a high-powered rifle at close range. All three victims were shot in different parts of the body - the face/neck, chest, and back. All three victims were carrying weapons and never got a chance to fire them. Grissom notices that there is no car to be found, which makes him wonder how they got there. Catherine suspects the killer drove the victims to the desert, shot them and drove off. She sees evidence of camouflage cream on one of the victims, while Grissom sees a rainbow scarf trapped in a bush. They recognize the scarf from the bank robbery and now know definitively that the victims are the bank robbers. One man is still at large- Rob In the lab, Bobby Dawson excitedly stops Grissom and tells him that the bullets used to kill the bank robbers in the desert desert 0.30 caliber, something you don't see very often. However, Grissom's hearing is giving and he ends up walking away from Bobby, seemingly ignoring him and leaving him confused. Grissom visits Greg, who tells him that the blood stains found in the vault got a hit - Vivian Verona, who was killed on the top floor of Pike's Gambling Hall two years ago. Greg gives him the report, and Grissom notes that there were multiple stab wounds from different depths to Vivian's body, which may have meant that two different knives were used. Greg tells him the murder weapon was never found, but the other blood donor in the safe could be the killer. Grissom sees Greg's hands shaking, which they've been doing since the lab explosion. Greg says it doesn't affect his work and Grissom tells him they will stop shaking eventually. Grissom looks at an inflated photo of Vivian wearing the rainbow scarf. She celebrates receiving a $50,000 tip, and Sam is seen in the photo with a few other people. Grissom then looks at the scene photo and sees that Vivian is no longer wearing the scarf. Warrick comes in with the scarf in the evidence bag, and Grissom lets him open the bag and cut off an identical piece of fabric to replicate the blood pattern. Grissom watches Warrick cut the evidence bag open with scissors and comes to a realization. He lets Warrick give him the scissors and takes an apple from Nick, who just entered the room. He sticks the scissors in the apple and sees that there are two stab wounds from different depths. Grissom concludes that the scissors were wrapped in the scarf. Warrick performs a reconstruction of the blood stain on the computer; It's obvious it's in the form of scissors. Nick notes that they don't look like regular scissors, because the blades are almost double the handles. Catherine and Sara come in, and Sara says Vivian Verona was a waitress for Sam Braun. She was murdered the night before Pike's Gambling Hall was due to implode; Looks like someone wanted her to disappear under the rubble. Sara tells them that the case went cold fast because there were no suspects or motives. Grissom has Warrick improve the sheet area on the computer and sees some letters inscribed on it. When the photo is flipped, it is clear RAMPART is inscribed on the scissors. A frustrated Catherine tells Grissom that Sam doesn't return any of her calls. When she offers to drive them to meet Sam and get to the bottom of everything, Grissom says he's not going. He shocks her by saying he's going for surgery before his hearing, and tells her to take care of the case. Rob Rubio was arrested and walked down the hallway of the police station as all the police officers watched. During Interrogation, Brass tells him that the gun found in the trunk of his car had bullets that The bullet was pulled out of Lockwood. Ballistics also matched the bullets with the three victims found in the desert. Brass tells Rob that he believes Sam hired him to work security at the Rampart because he had a job to do. He lets Rob know that he left a lot of evidence to connect with the murders. A flashback is shown of Rob shooting the three bank robbers in the desert; Sam grabs a bag and leaves. Brass wants Rob to give up Sam, or he'll spend the rest of his life on death row. Rob chooses death row and says he'll live longer this way. Catherine visits Sam in his office in his casino and looks over framed photos of the openings of former casinos, complete with the scissors used to cut the ribbons. She asks where the scissors used in the opening of the Rampart are, and Sam tells her that he thinks they were sold at a silent auction. Catherine sees this over and asks for the truth. Sam tells her that Benny Murdock killed Vivian after he caught her cheating on him with Sam. He went to Benny's hospital when he was dying, and Benny revealed that he kept the scissors and used them to kill Vivian. Benny then put the scissors in a locker. When Catherine asks why Benny hasn't lost the scissors or tries to wash the blood away, Sam can't answer her. Catherine sums up the case to protect Benny after he was already dead. Sam hired Rob and three cronies to rob a bank and steal the scissors back. Sam explains that he has a legacy to maintain - if Benny went down for murder, he goes down, too. He hired Rob to take care of things. Catherine tells Sam they have the safe and couldn't identify any of the blood stains. She tested the unknown blood against hers and found seven alleles mean - she is his daughter. She suspects that, contrary to Sam's accounts of Vivian's murder, he killed Vivian and covered Benny for him. Sam categorically denies that he is capable of killing anyone, but Catherine tells him that science proves he did. Grissom is in the hospital getting prepared for surgery when Catherine surprises him by stopping by and wishing him luck. He thanks her for being there and Catherine gives him a hug.
