Kung fu massage milford

The Connecticut Post Mall massage parlour is in hot water again after an undercover Milford police operation found that at least one employee was offering services without a proper government license. Same business, Kung Fu Massage, was one of several local salons temporarily closed late last summer after investigators found they had been violated by state law. Breach of compliance From Milford Police Information Officer Jeffrey Nielsen, last June the department contacted massage parlors in the city as part of an education program informing owners/representatives of new laws and regulations relating to their activities under the Public Act. Then, on August 19, police investigators - in collaboration with the Milford Health Department and Connecticut State Police - conducted a joint inspection of compliance with massage facilities and massage therapists in the city. The operation led to violations being considered at five agencies, Nielsen said in a press release. This compliance operation remained open for additional monitoring of these institutions. Sanitary issues Then, on January 24, officials from the Milford Department of Health conducted a kung fu massage check after a complaint about sanitary issues was received at the salon. During the visit, Nielsen said investigators found that none of the employees at the scene had a valid government license to perform massage services. As a result of the violations, the business has been closed until the violations are resolved, he said, adding that city officials continue to monitor compliance with business requirements. Undercover Operation Further, members of the Milford Police Department conducted a compliance check on February 26 in kung fu massage used undercover by police officers. During the inspection, the employee offered to perform massage services to an undercover officer without a proper government license to do so, Nielsen said. The employee, owner of chargedAs as a result, employee Guilan Guo, 52, of 38th Avenue in New York City, N.Y. was charged with participating in massage therapy without a proper license. Guo was released on $1,000 bond. In addition, the salon's owner, Quiju Xia, 48, of 32Th Avenue in Flushing, N.Y. was charged with allowing an employee to perform massage services without a proper license. Xia was issued with a $5,000 bond. Both are scheduled to appear at Milford Superior Court on March 25. According to Milford police, each local business received information about the new laws in June. Three months later, Milford police, along with the city's health department and a state police spokesman, visited six massage facilities to check for violations. Of the six, only one remains open. Four businesses were found to have multiple breaches and were closed today. They are: Ginko Beauty Spa, 554 Boston Post RoadBody Relax Palace, 365 New Haven Ave.Kung-Fu Massage, 1201 Boston Post RoadGreat Massage, 365 Boston Post Road Merritt Massage, at number 465 Bridgeport Avenue, was found to be a minor violation of the law and was allowed to remain open, according to police. A sixth business, VIP Spa, at 232 Boston Post Road, has already closed, police said. The new rules err that all practicing massage therapists must complete a school of massage therapy and must be nationally certified. The law also requires massage therapists to renew their licenses every two years and hold employers accountable for the qualifications of their therapists. The operation is ongoing and more local businesses will be inspected, police said. Neil McNamara Posted 12:00 AM EDT, Monday, August 19, 2013 MILFORD - Milford police have closed four massage parlors for alleged violations of state law relating to licensing massage therapy. On August 19, police, along with members of the city's Health Department, visited each of the city's six massage parlors to verify compliance. Of the six, four were found to be in violation and closed. These massage parlors were: - Ginko Beauty Spa, 554 Boston Post Road - Body Relax Palace, 365 New Have Ave. - Kung-Fu Massage, 1201 Boston Post Road - Great Massage, 365 Boston Post Road Merritt Massage, at number 465 Bridgeport Ave., had minor violations but was allowed to remain in business. The VIP spa was closed for the time of inspections. Police are not disclosing details of the violations.
