I've recently discovered that I can find a good deal of information online that I would never find in any of my reference books. These posts are about a few of my recent discoveries about various castles in Europe, which include a castle located in New Zealand. The Castles of Malta Malta is a country in the Mediterranean that is inhabited mostly by Catholic Melitans and the Maltese language is similar to Italian. Malta is in fact a sovereign state, a province of Italy, and has an official language of Italian, but the native Maltese language is still widely spoken in the country. Malta is separated from Italy by a bay on the east coast of the Mediterranean. Due to its location, this island is able to export its goods to the rest of Europe, Africa and the Middle East. The island is also a popular tourist destination and a UNESCO World Heritage Site. When the Turks invaded the islands in 1530, they fortified the Castell Gerberga to protect the capital, Valletta. During the second world war, the island was occupied by the Axis Powers and used as an air and naval base. At the end of the war, the island was captured by the British and became a colony of Malta. During the next few decades, the British instituted many changes to the island to improve its infrastructure and make it more attractive as a tourist destination. In 1974, the island joined the European Union and became a member of the Council of Europe. The new constitution of Malta establishes that the official language is Maltese. It has been a common occurrence for the Maltese people to be a majority in the country's legislative and executive branches. The Castell Gerberga was originally built in the 14th century and was a fortification for the defense of the capital, Valletta.
