The problem of comma splicing is a fairly common mistake in written English. This happens when a writer joins two independent provisions with a comma and nothing else. Commas Splices, fused sentences, and Run-on Sentences Some people use the term start-up on sentencing to refer to both fused sentences and commas splices. These two terms refer to two different errors. Try not to mix (mix, mix, combine) two terms. Definition: Comma splicing is a comma that connects (merging) two independent provisions. Position is a group of words that has a theme and a verb. Comma splicing is a fairly common mistake in written English, it occurs when a writer joins two independent provisions with a comma and nothing else. The comma above joins two independent provisions. (An independent clause may detached -- and be punctuated as - offer.) A fused sentence, on the other hand, occurs when two independent clauses (full ideas) are joined without any punctuation. It is best to avoid the launch time on offer altogether and use only the terms comma splicing and fused sentences. These two terms term more specific and more descriptive. Examples of comma Splices take a look at the following examples. An example of an independent item: Robert ate worms. It's a caveat. Robert is the subject, and ate the verb. This provision is independent because it can stand alone as a proposal. Now let's take another independent point: Another independent point: Mary doesn't like Robert. If you take two independent provisions and join them with a comma, you have a comma splice: Comma Splice: Robert ate worms, Mary does not like Robert. What does the word Splice mean? To splice means to join, so a comma splice could easily be called a COMma JOIN, but that would be too easy. Some people get confused and think that the word splicing means separate, as in a split - slice - splicing. But it's not. For splicing means to join, and in standard American English, you should not use commas splices in writing. It's a formal rule. Commas splicing are easy mistakes for teachers and editors to notice. How to fix the comma? The punctuation of the two provisions in the form of proposals. Use the period. Robert ate worms. Mary doesn't like Robert. Use :) join the reservations. Robert ate worms; Mary doesn't like Robert. Use the subordination of the connection (because, when, so though) in front of one position. Because Robert ate worms, Mary doesn't like Robert. Notice the connection that exists between the positions. This is a causal/effective connection, and the subordination of the connection is because it makes this connection clear. Use a co-colonial plus conjuncture (so, then, however). Robert ate worms; so Mary doesn't like Robert. Again, note how the relationship between cause and effect is explained by the conjunctural adverb therefore. Use a comma followed by a coordinating connection (for, and neither, but, or, nevertheless, so) Robert ate worms, so Mary doesn't like Robert. The words you use mean something. Remember that you can't use words like this however, and so just because they make grammatical meaning. Those words mean something. Words, though, but, and still point to a contrast: I was on a diet; however, I still gained weight. Words, because, therefore, already point to the connection of cause and effect. Words and then indicate that you just add information. Use the words carefully. Sheets For more explanation and exercises in correcting the comma splicing, download a free sheet.
