Ramadan 2020 dates

You may have heard that Ramadan is approaching, and may be wondering what it is. Ramadan is the ninth month in the Islamic year, which is very different from the Gregorian calendar of Western cultures. Observed by Muslims around the world, it is a month of strict daily fasting and prayer. It is dedicated to the month in which Allah opened the Koran to the Prophet Muhammad. It is also the holiest and holiest month in Muslim culture and is widely regarded as one of the five pillars of Islam. Where Christians have the Ten Commandments, Muslims have five basic rules known as the five pillars of Islam. These are rules that all strict Muslims must abide by. The five pillars include Shahada, a declaration of faith; Prayer, Muslims should pray five times a day; Fasting from dawn to dusk, as it was done during Ramadan; Charity, every Muslim must give money or services to others; and the Hajj, pilgrimage to Mecca. Every year, millions of Muslims make this pilgrimage to the holiest cities, following in the footsteps of Muhammad. JGallione/Getty Images During Ramadan Muslims fast during the daytime. Fasting is a fundamental act that allows Muslims to devote themselves fully to their faith. In doing so, this act also brings them closer to Allah or God. Watching fast doesn't mean they can't eat at all. It would be impossible and unwell. Instead, Muslims eat before dawn (suhoor) and after sunset (Adhan). Aside from fasting, Ramadan is also a time for reflection. Many people adopt new practices or hobbies in the same way as New Year's resolutions. Some Muslims are better at how they relate to people or themselves while others take a more spiritual journey. Captured ByAmelia/Getty Images Surveillance is fast not without its causes. In Islam, it is believed that abstinence from food and other vices helps to discipline the mind, body and soul. Not eating, drinking or experiencing other pleasures gives Muslims more opportunities to focus on worship and prayer. The fewer objects or distractions a person has around him, the easier it is for self-reflection and to be grateful for what they have. This means that the month in Islam or Judaism is very different from the month in Christianity. These months can sometimes vary by 12 days, meaning that although Ramadan is always the ninth month of the Islamic year, it may take place in another month according to the Gregorian calendar. In other words, Ramadan takes place at the same time every Islamic year. It is not necessarily the same time every year in the West. GCShutter/Getty Images Because the Islamic calendar is a lunar calendar, it means their months begin with New moons. This corresponds to the Koran, the Muslim holy text. In the West, the New Moon of the New Moon different days of each month, because of how our calendar works. Looking at it this way is a great way to see how Ramadan and other holy months occur at different times each year. The lunar months average 29.5 days, meaning the Islamic calendar has only about 354 days per year. GCShutter/Getty Images The month of Ramadan begins on the day when the new moon after the eighth month is visible. Thus, it ends between 29 and 30 days later. Ramadan ends with a holiday called Eid al-Fitr, one of the most important Islamic holidays. For Eid, Muslims dress in their best clothes, exchange gifts, decorate their homes with lights and music, and finally, after 30 days of fasting, they feast. At the end of Ramadan, Muslims are also obliged to share their blessings with the poor and the less fortunate. JGallione/Getty Images The month of Ramadan is not a month-long holiday. Muslims are expected to continue to work and communicate despite their posts. The end of Ramadan is celebrated as a public holiday in the eastern countries. In the United States, however, Ramadan is not considered a national holiday. Despite this, many Muslim businesses will change their time during the event to celebrate. Although, when Eid al-Fitr happens it all depends on watching the new moon. In other words, Muslims on the East Coast may well start celebrating Eid at a different time to those on the West Coast. Lunar days begin at sunset, so the days begin and end at different times. sabirmallick/Getty Images Ramadan is the holy month of giving, so many gifts and good deeds are done during the month. Giving gifts in Islam is a little different from how it is in Western denominations. There is a Muslim proverb tahaabu, tahaadu, which translates as giving gifts, spreading love. Food is a common gift during Ramadan. People are encouraged to cook for each other and, in this act, to give those they love. As the years tick on, however, parents begin to buy their children age-appropriate gifts on the morning of each Eid. Danishkhan/Getty Images Eid al-Fitr literally translates as Feast of Post Disruption. Once the new moon is visible at the end of Ramadan, Eid al-Fitr will be upon us. The holiday covers the next three days, devoting time to celebrate the hard work and dedication put into the Islamic faith during Ramadan. Contrary to the fasting of Ramadan, Muslims are actually obliged to eat and drink during Eid. Most Muslims violate their fast with dates and water, as the Koran claims that Muhammad did. For Eid, Muslims each give money they can for those less fortunate, so they too can celebrate the holiday. Eid about prayer and family, family, holiday, not forgetting those who are less fortunate. Eid is a wonderful holiday dedicated to love, faith and celebration. mustafagull/Getty Images Ramadan is the ninth month of the Islamic calendar. Because Islam uses the lunar calendar, Ramadan begins and ends at different times each year. The way the lunar calendar works is that the beginning of each month begins with the observation of the new moon. The lunar calendar is about 11 days shorter than the solar calendar used in much of the Western world. To learn more about the different calendars past and present, see Calendar Area. The beginning of Ramadan each year is based on a combination of moon observations and astronomical calculations. In the United States, many Muslims are sticking to the decision of the Islamic Society of North America to start the holiday. The end of Ramadan is defined in a similar way. Advertising for Muslims, Ramadan is the month of blessing, which includes prayer, fasting and charity. The meaning of Ramadan dates back many centuries, until about 610 AD it was at this time, during the ninth month of the lunar calendar, Muslims believe God, or Allah, showed the first verses of the Koran, the holy book of Islam. According to Islam, a caravan trader named Mohammed was walking in the desert near Mecca. This happened on what is now Saudi Arabia. One night he received a voice from the sky. It was an angel, Gabriel, who told Muhammad that he was chosen to receive the word of Allah. A few days after that, Muhammad began to speak verses that would be transcribed as the Koran. In many mosques, during Ramadan, verses from the Koran are read every night. Prayers are known as tarawih. By the end of Ramadan, the full Scriptures had been read. Ramadan is a time when Muslims can connect with the teachings of the ku'rans. The main component of Ramadan is fasting. In the next section, we learn how Muslims practice the fasting of Ramadan and the importance of fasting to the Islamic faith. During Ramadan, Muslims practice saw or fasting. Of course, no one has to fast for a month. The practice of fasting during Ramadan means that Muslims cannot eat or drink anything, including water, while the sun is shining. Fasting is one of the five pillars or responsibilities of Islam. Like most religious practices in Islam, Muslims have been fasting since the age of 12. One of the most important aspects of the fasting of Ramadan is called niya. Nia literally means intention. Muslims should not simply or accidentally abstain from food; they must meet the requirements of the country. To achieve this requirement, a Muslim must provide in his heart that fasting is intended to worship only Allah. Thus, if someone fasts for political or dietary reasons, they will not reach any. In fact, according to the Scriptures, the One who makes make niyyah till dawn, do not fast. The determination to fast is equal to the importance of fasting itself. Advertising In much of the Muslim world, restaurants are closed during daylight hours of Ramadan. Families wake up early, before sunrise, and eat a meal called sohour. After sunset, fasting is broken with a meal called iftar. Iftar often starts with meal dates and sugary drinks to give fasting Muslims a quick boost of energy, and it's rich food. It can include any kind of food, but dessert almost always includes konafa or qattayef. Conafa is a cake of wheat, sugar, honey, raisins and nuts. It's a similar cake, but it's smaller and folds up to pack nuts and raisins. In between two meals, night iftar and pre-dawn suhur, Muslims are free to eat. Fasting is so important to Muslims for a number of reasons. First, when you do not pay attention to your mortal needs, such as food, you can become more in tune with God and your spiritual side. In addition, the fast serves as a reminder to Muslims of the suffering of the poor. This idea underlines the importance of charity during Ramadan. Fasting gives Muslims the opportunity to practice self-control and cleanse the body and mind. Many cultures and religions use fasting for this purpose. During Ramadan, fasting helps Muslims with their spiritual devotion, as well as in developing a sense of kinship with other Muslims. As history goes, Ramadan is the month in which Allah contacted the prophet, Mohammed, to give him poems of the holy book, or qu'ran. Thus, prayer during Ramadan is especially important. Muslims say night prayers, whether Ramadan or not, but taraweeh, or Ramadan night prayer, carries extra weight. According to the Scriptures: Anyone who observes the night prayer of Ramadan as an expression of his faith and seeks rewards from Allah, his previous sins will be washed away. Thus, the night prayer of Ramadan, after the day of fasting, serves the purpose of eradicating sins that were previously committed. Thus, night prayer is an important element of ramadan rituals. At the end of Ramadan and before the violation of fasting, Muslims speak Tabin. Takbin is a statement that there is nothing in the world that is more or more than Allah. Takbeer is always spoken when a Muslim completes an important task, as in the completion of the fasting of Ramadan. In translation, tuckbin exclaims: Allah is the greatest, Allah is the greatest. There is no deity worthy of worship except Allah, and Allah is the greatest. Allah is the greatest, and all praise is thanks to Allah. It is recommended that men speak so-so out loud, and women say it in silence. Takbin is a sign that the Eid al-Fitr holiday has begun. It is a joyful statement of faith and achievement. Achievement.
