Nikon (www.nikonusa.com) has made a bold new product debut in the DSLR market with the D7200. With the introduction of this camera, Nikon has been able to satisfy the demand for a high-quality digital SLR camera. The overall performance and features of the D7200 exceed the expectations of the owners of previous Nikon SLRs. Design, Operation, and Setup {#sec2} ===== Figure 1{ref-type="fig"} shows the D7200. It is a small camera, with an overall length of 18.5 mm, width of 19.8 mm, and depth of 10.6 mm. It is almost identical in size and shape to the D90, although the D7200 has a larger magnesium alloy body and various improvements in functionality. One of the improvements is the new AF system. ![Nikon D7200. A lower right light-emitting diode (LED) provides a quick exposure meter to aid in exposure choices. The camera's most important feature, the viewfinder, is the same as that of the D90, D200, D3, D5, D300, D3S, and D3X, with a vertically arranged pentamirror reflex type. The top of the viewfinder, marked "A," provides a color frame for the subject to be photographed, while the bottom of the viewfinder, marked "B," provides the electronic viewfinder image for framing the subject, including the aperture, shutter speed, and other settings of the camera. The full frame display can be set to one of three frames sizes: 3"x3", 3"x2.5", or 2"x3". If the frame size is set to 2"x3", you can enlarge it by tapping the L-SHIFT button. The D7200 has no external flash unit. The built-in flash can only fire for 1/3 second and does not have the wireless capability of the Nikon speedlight flash units. There is also no wireless control of flash from the camera 520fdb1ae7
