Sardinian Farmer and Producer of San Giuliano Olive Oil Ranks as Italy's #1 Olive Oil Producer Three Years In A Row

Clovis, CA – For the third year in a row, Domenico Manca S.p.A. ranks as the No. 1 Italian Olive Oil Maker and remains in the list of Top 10 Olive Makers in the World according to the World Association of Wine Writers and Journalists (WAWWJ).

The association, comprised of 13,500 journalists, bloggers, and judges representing 80 countries, combines the annual results of the most recognized shows and contests throughout the globe to rank the world's most successful wineries and olive oil producers and publishes a Top 100 EVOO World Ranking every December.

In 2022, San Giuliano extra virgin olive oils received 68 top awards across all continents. The collection ascribing to the company's world rankings includes their sustainably grown and bottled-at-the-source Bosana, Fruttato, Organic, Primér, and Originale extra virgin olive oils.

Pasquale Manca, president of Domenico Manca S.p.A., believes their position on the global stage is “a reflection of the major role our research contributes to our everyday operations, and our firm intention to be at the center of change and innovation at an international level.”

Known in the industry for its dynamic approach toward the future of olive oil farming and production, Domenico Manca S.p.A. has been on a decades-long quest to bring local olive growing to international heights by applying the most advanced agronomic techniques and cutting-edge technologies for olive processing and oil extraction.

“With the help of our team of highly professional agronomists, everything is designed to obtain only extra virgin olive oil of excellence, with rich organoleptic profiles and characterized by the most typical scents and aromas of the best local, national, and international varieties,” explains Manca.
