No Millions of North Americans currently own video cameras or digital video cameras and use them regularly for filming important family important, vacations and special events. Running a video editing service that takes raw footage of a customer's movie and turns it into a fantastic video production including music, titles and special effects is a fantastic business venture to put into action. The video editing business can be easily managed from your home studio, and the business can focus on both video editing and digital film editing. Using a demo kiosk that can be created in a mall or grocery store is a fantastic way to promote a video editing service, as it can give potential customers a first-hand look at how their cherished family videos will look after being professionally edited. Running a video and digital editing service requires special skills and equipment. However, like any great business opportunity, hard work, research and planning can pay off in terms of personal and financial rewards.
