Сегодня) ежедневная газета, которая является крупнейшей газетой Telugu в штате Андхра-Прадеш и штате Телангана в Индии. По данным Индийского опроса читателей (IRS) за 1 квартал 2012 года, Eenadu занимает шестое место среди Indian language daily newspapers with a total readership (TR) of 5,906,000. Eenadu (On this day; This Country, with two meanings in Telugu) was founded by Indian media baron Ramoji Rao in 1974. Eenadu's rapid expansion has allowed it to diversify its portfolio into other markets such as finance and cheat funds (e.g. Margadarsi chits), food (Priya Foods), film production (Usha Kiran Films), film distribution (Mayuri Films) and a group of television channels (ETV). All businesses are organized within the Ramoji Group.Various Eenadu editions exist throughout the Telugu-speaking region of India, which make up the state of Andhra Pradesh and Thelanan state, as well as in cities such as Chennai, Bengaluru, Mumbai and New Delhi. At launches in visahapatnam, he was unable to sell more than 3,000 copies a week. Eenadu has proven to be trying to become a daily publication ranked among publications. However, it has been popular in the regions, and rivalry is still a problem. Eenadu hired a new set of directors to be part of its key decision and management team, which drove it to what it is today: mostly the highest-profile newspapers in the region. Eenadu was launched from Visakhapatnam on August 10, 1974 by Ramoji Rao, a businessman with other successful businesses: Priya Pickles and Margadarsi Chitfunds. At the time, Andhra Prabha, owned by the Indian Express Group, was a leading regional newspaper. Eenadu started with a printed order of 4,000 copies, hand-crafted and produced using a shaken printing press. But by the time it was admitted to the Audit office in 1976, its circulation had already reached a readership of 48,000. By 1978, Eenadu had surpassed andrah Prabha's circulation, and by 1995 two other rivals, Andhra Patrick and Udayam, had folded, leaving Enada with more than seventy-five percent of the audited circulations of Telugu's daily newspapers. When Eenadu expanded to Hyderabad in 1975, it divided the city into target areas, recruited delivery boys three months in advance and gave away paper for free for a week. In the 1980s, technology-enabled Eenadu spread to large areas other than major cities. Previously, it was difficult to manage even the three editions of the 1970s (Visakhapatnam, Vijayawada and Hyderabad) because the only means of communication available for publication at the time were a telegram, telephone and teleprinter, which had a limited presence in rural areas of Andhra Pradesh. But with the introduction of offset printing, photo-compons software and computers, Eenadu managed to launch editions in small towns like Tirupathi in 1982. Since the 1980s, Eenadu's news editor from his office in Hyderabad has run a huge local collection and distribution organization However, by the end of the 1980s, there were six significant Telugu daily newspapers running, and the business was highly competitive. In 1989, Eenadu introduced regional daily newspapers (tabloids) to carry its presence not only in regional cities such as Rajamundri, Karimnagar, Guntur and Adilabad, but also in the cities of Taluka, such as Suryapet and Tadepalligum. Each publication required forty engineers to launch print editions. District daily Eenadu newspapers were based on market research, purporting to suggest that heavy local content would generate new readership and increase advertising revenue. Currently, regional daily newspapers print local news specifically for every major location in the area, thus denying the need for any separate local daily. Several special sections are published every day of the week. Presentation of circulation data for the audit period for July - December 2015' (PDF). Circulation Audit Office. Eenadu began to use the printing order of 4,000 palm-painted and produced using used printed media. But, by now it was accepted from the Circulation Audit Office in 1976, its stream reached readership 48000. By 1978, Eenadu surpassed Andhra Prabha with flow and, since 1995, two new contests by Andhra Patrick and Udayamam brushed, resulting in Eenadulies with more HTML percent of the verified Telugu dai stream. After Enadou expanded to Hyderabad in 1975, he divided the city into target areas, recruited delivery boys in advance and sucked out paper for a week. It used to be difficult to deal with three variations of the 1970s (Visakhapatnam, Vijayawada and Hyderabad variants) because the only communication tools available to this book at the time were telegram, telephone and teleprinter, which had a limited presence in rural areas of Andhra Pradesh. Eenadu epaper district version Whatever it is, with the introduction of offset printing, photocomponing computers and applications, Eenadu was able to install variants in small towns such as Tirupathi in 1982. In the 1980s, Eenadu, a news editor at his office in Hyderabad, oversaw a massive local news gathering and business distribution. However, by the late 1980s, six big Telugu newspapers were launched and the market was highly competitive. Each publication required twenty engineers to launch print editions. Eenadu's regional daily newspapers were based on a market study that said the heavy substance of the community could create new reader groups and increase advertising revenue. At this point, eenadu epaper Telangana (ts eenadu paper) district daily newspapers print neighborhood news especially for every significant place in the area, thus denying the need for any independent area every day. Few exclusive sections are published every day of the week.
