Skyscraper Security

Danny is walking into the Empire State Building in New York City. This is the most famous Skyscraper in The USA. Danny isn't visiting the building; he works here. He is a security guard. There are about 100 security guards that keep this building safe. Danny works in the security control room. This is a large room with many computers, telephones, and tv screens. From here, Danny can see what is happening from any of the cameras in the building. Every security guard has a radio to call the control room and report what is happening.

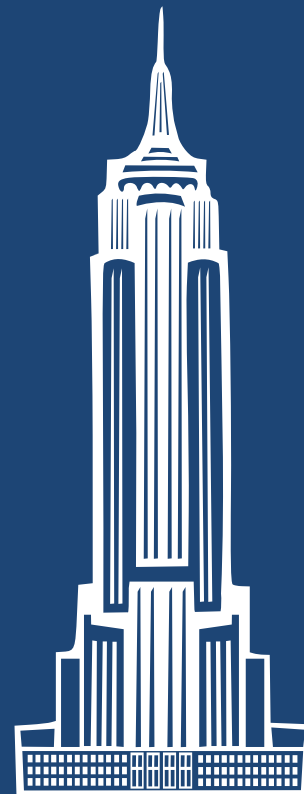

Skyscraper Security

Danny sits down at his desk and starts to watch the many screens in front of him. He watches people come into the building and walk through metal detectors. These detectors make sure people don't bring dangerous things into the building. He can see people at the top of the building looking around outside. They can see the entire city of New York from the top, but it can be dangerous, so there are many security guards to keep people safe. Many other security guards are always walking around the building to take care of any problems.

Skyscraper Security

The Empire State Building gets over 4 million visitors each year. It has over 15,000 people that work in the building. There are 102 floors with 73 elevators going up and down. Hundreds of cameras, fingerprint scanners, and ID scanners keep the building secure. Danny and the other security guards keep everyone who visits and works here safe. Most large buildings have security guards watching over them. You might not always see Danny and the other security guards, but they are working hard to keep you safe.
