Auschwitz camp and after that he is obliged to draw a number of tattoos on the hands of each new prisoner who goes to prison for the first time. Lale turns out to be an expert in the work, but he actually shows his talent in several ways, like taking money from the dead and providing food to his friends. The story is not one man's story, but it tells us about the victims of the prisoners for each other, and the zeal for survival that is never wet, even if they all face severe punishment every time they try to do something of their own will. Heather Morris, like his book Der T'ttowier von Auschwitz tells the story of the Jews in great detail and tells us about their terrifying experience as well. It seems that Lale's life is robotic until Gita appears and love is lit, hidden in his heart, and for the first time he wants to break out of this tragic life to have her as his partner in life in the outside world. Richard Armitage has kept the rise and fall of history well managed through storytelling; the narrative is slow and easy to understand.
