"The power of bottom-up movements – lessons to be learned"

Political agreements, legislative regulations and even official settings for education are not enough efficient and we are facing big crisis in terms of unsustainability. On the other hand we can observe strong movements powered by people who are not only willing to change their behaviours but also are making strong influence on business operation. They are very active in internet through the facebook, blogs etc. During the workshop the participants will reflect what is the educational implication of that phenomena. What can we learn from such movements? What is the educational success ? What competences are needed to handle with such educational challenge ? What kind of methods are needed to support them?

The main activity of the workshop is to discuss the strong and weak points of bottom-up movements like 'the Polish ZeroWaste' from the ESD perspective and then consider the opportunities and threats. In the main part of the workshop participants will be SWOT analysis for educational implication.

ANNA BATORCZAK ASSISTANT PROFESSOR UNIVERSITY OF WARSAW POLAND

She works in the University Centre for SD at University of Warsaw. The Centre is a unique scientific and implementation institution on ESD in Poland and also active at the international level. Working in the Centre I was initiator and coordinator for number of national and international ESD projects addressed to different professional groups. Recently I am coordinator of establishing MSc course on SD. The beauty of nature and the concept of ecology as an ołkoc, = house. I admire the perfection and harmony of natural world. The realisation that everything is so much contacted with each other including us humans and the life is so unique and precious in the universe. Any activists for peace and environment the head with Mahatma Gandhi, Lester R. Brown and The Yes Men Buddhism understood a set of methods to live (and die) better. Buddhist teaches to develop joy and compassion.
