If you do have it, consider letting them know you're not interested, but it's a very powerful and useful feature. A: @Hans got it right. The lack of a quote in the key has no effect on the availability of the function and you can safely ignore it. However, if you are using quote, and the active time period is available, one possibility is to add this to your original message. @[{Hour='2020-03-24T20:00:00'}] and specify the active time-period in the second parameter It is not clear if you have already done this, but it is always good to double check if you can get the available dates in a (json) dictionary, {[{dt | quote}}] which I'm sure you do "The future is for the young" and all that jazz. So maybe the problem is not the ages of the interns, but the publication of the research. This is an appropriate time to be working on old research, but perhaps not when people are actively interested in it. Should we not, then, be writing about new research, or maybe this is a relatively new publication format. What is the difference between "publish or perish" and "publish and perish" if I can't publish my ideas? I still think it is a great opportunity for the young people. :: Thank you very much, and thank you all for the words of encouragement.
