We've updated the site to add support for Stardew Valley 1.3 beta! This only has basic support for multiplayer savegames - specifically, it would probably refuse to work if you married one of your farmhands. Over the next week we will be improving support for multiplayer savegames, and I will post again when the site is updated with this. As always, if you encounter any errors or problems, please email us or report the problem on GitHub! There are only so many hours a day when Stardew Valley plays, so wasting precious time thinking about where each seed should be planted and where every road should be paved is not a good idea. What's more, it can take a very long time until you're ready to fill all this space, and short-term farming solutions can lead to long-term disorder (as our reviewer soon discovered). That's where this fantastic fan planner comes in stardew.info/planner. The planner is pretty much doing exactly what you expect. It provides a view of an empty farm on which you can draw in boxes to represent crops, fences, roads, and more. It even shows an overlay on the area-effect for sprinklers and scarecrows, something not even presented in the game itself. Once you come up with the layout you like, you can hit the save icon and bookmark generated the URL to get back to your design. Once you get into the farm game looks as good as your planned, here's a guide on how to take a screenshot of it all at once. Now, if you'll excuse me, I have a farm to plan for. Stardew Valley has been decorating our screens since 2016, and during this time we have to cope with all the best tools and have harvested every crop under the sun. There's a real sense of skill when it comes to creating the farms themselves, and there's a great community to share the best layouts that people have created. can focus on crops, livestock, machinery or even flowers. You can keep it mechanical and efficient, or prioritize a pretty and welcoming atmosphere. Whatever your taste, you are sure to find inspiration among our picks for the best farm designs. Farm. February 12, 2020 Anastasia Maillot: With the latest 1.4 update, Stardew Valley has been updated with tons of new features and elements that make the game much more interesting. The NPC also got an extra heart event to make their stories more interesting. First of all, now is the time if you ever go back to this game and give it some much needed love. To inspire players in their new passage, we have added two additional farm designs that will hopefully help farmers plan how best to produce their crops and other resources. 10 Industrial Stone For those who just want some simple old efficiency, this farm layout is based on producing resources as much as possible in the most compact way possible. It may not look better, but there is a place and purpose for everything. The middle part is designed for crops and trees to provide a steady flow of wood and income from crops. On the left side, all the animal stuff featured, with a fairly small and compact area of grass. Beasts may not have a ton of freedom roaming in this area, this layout definitely allows players to maximize profits quickly. 9 Deep Forest Farm Type Deep Sea Farm provides a lush, natural environment. However, at the same time it takes away some much needed space to make the largest, most efficient farm. Fortunately there are still ways to make it work. Here, the cultures in the center are organized neatly, where space allows. The rest of the free space is used to create slightly more natural enclosures for farm animals. The line between the cobbled paths and the grass fields in front of the barns guarantees a separation between the natural space and the organization. In this layout in particular, it's nice to see these two styles walk hand in hand effectively. 8 Harvest Central This layout puts the initial focus of any farm at the center of everything: crops. Dividing them into neat, symmetrical sections makes it easier to separate different types. With all the charred land that a standard farm brings, putting iridium sprinklers to use is the most efficient way to use this space, and farm as many profitable goods as possible. Putting barns and chicken coops at the top of the map allows you to house livestock while keeping the focus on crops. Sheds down the side of the card can be used to house kegs or save cans by acting like a small brewery. The stable at the entrance also allows quick access to the city with your horse. 7 Flower Forest This variation of Forest Farm is very aesthetically pleasing, but still effective with rectangular plots for crops, complete with iridium sprinklers. The flower patch at the bottom is also complemented by bee houses, which allows you to make fragrant honey throughout the year (except winter). The windmill works well as a central feature as well. Placing sheds on the The greenhouse side is a good idea; It makes for quick trips for round-the-car kegs or cans indoors, making artisanal production quick and easy. 6 Diverse and organized This standard farm layout is shared nicely and clearly. The garden or fruit tree section in the bottom left corner is a great addition, with plenty of trees to make the most of each season collecting fruit. The coop and shed sharing a large enclosure in the top left means that large animals and chicken coop animals can be in space that creates a warm, attractive look. Square plots of land on the right side make a really good way to farm, with a 24-space area to harvest to keep things simple and organized. 5 Crystal Maze Check out this example of a map of a farm on top of a hill. The shed is a good addition to the southwestern hilltop, which also leaves room for rocks and knots to spawn for mining. The stone floor covering the area with a crystal floor used as a path adds a real mythical atmosphere. The vineyard area in the bottom left corner works well, with sprinklers allowing multiple crop columns to grow, with space to run between them to assemble the goods. The scarecrow getting snug with crops saves space, making the compact crop area in the middle of the map. 4 Riverland Paradise When it comes to the Riverland version of all farm maps, the space for crops is more limited, so this design is a great solution. With a couple of islands dedicated to fruit trees, other blend of crops and buildings, the space is diversified to use all available resources. Keeping the main crop area close to the house is a good idea as it allows a short trip in a delivery box. The tight rows of bee houses make it easy to harvest honey, and there is room for Slime Hutch to breed Slimes and Harvest Slime Balls. 3 Green pastures are a much greener plan for a standard farm, this layout is definitely attractive. Collectible stuffed animals are lined up in the middle to show them, and only the required amount is used for actual crops. Crystalariums match The Slime Hutch's color scheme, and the amount makes for a whole lot of gemstone replication. The shed and chicken coop are separate, in different areas of the map to keep the organization easy. Cheese and mayonnaise machines can be placed inside sheds to keep it all compact and hidden. 2 Rural Brewery This layout is all about profit. The perfect line of beautifully organized fruit trees will produce a lot of fruit that can be injected into the mass of the barrel located at the top of the space. This is Maximum earnings, like barrels, when they are made fermentation, will produce wine and juices, making much more money than the original culture. Pattern tree types makes the farm look pleasing to the eye as well, keeping extras like ovens and bait bins out of at the very edge of the map. It's effective and attractive. 1 Animal Haven Here is a good example of a farm focused on animals. Sections of the barn and chicken coop are segregated, but you could mix it if you want. With eight barns on the left all in the same area, with plenty of room to roam and grass to eat, it's like a small area of a barnyard. The valley will have the happiest cows, goats, pigs and sheep. A similar design works for chicken coops, but chickens, ducks and rabbits don't need as much space. The crop section is nicely put out too, with varying sizes to spice things up. Fences make sure everything is ok, and completes the homely, farm life feel.
