Part hotel, some hostel, some rooms have private baths, the rest share showers and water closets on their designated floor. The hotel's location on the corner of busy Third Avenue and the quiet pedestrian-only part of East 25th Street is convenient for some of Manhattan's most desirable areas - Gramercy, Madison Square Park, Flatiron district, Empire State Building, and Union Square. See another bottom row The five-storey, brick-covered hotel, built at the turn of the century, was once an illegal home, a hotel for relief recipients, and a low-key pastime for drag queens, butterflies and drug addicts before it became an ongoing art project in the 1980s. Today it's a popular spot for budget travellers, free spirits and artists. An unspecified peach-colored gate next to a Chinese restaurant serves as an entrance. (You must ring the buzzer to get in.) Once inside, it hits you - an assault of artwork that covers almost every inch of floor-to-ceiling space in a vorcel of paint. There's no doorman or elevator to help you up the steep stairs to the lobby, but a sign instructs guests to move the local cats back up the stairs if they're hanging by the door. The tiny lobby, filled with jewellery, the second floor and the adjacent sitting room, which has a sofa and work desk, offer little room to gather, but it is not unusual to see guests lingering at sea or wandering the corridors to watch the artwork. Each floor represents a different scene created by local artists and former hotel workers. See another scene The hotel's location, adjacent to the towers of Baruch College, enjoys being in a pedestrian-only block on East 25th Street, a courtyard-style atmosphere where students gather around coffee tables over books and lunch. Part of the hotel is also across from Third Avenue, a much noisier street, bustling with Irish pubs, restaurants, and thy-hand shops. The greener surroundings of Gramercy Park, Madison Square Park and Union Square Park are all a 10-minute walk away. Or an 80-minute subway ride to JFK Airport in 20 minutes, or a 60-minute subway ride to LaGuardia See More Location Ethereal Airport, macabre and abstract are all highly sourced for guests' accommodations at the Carlton Arms. With each of the 54 spaces designed by a different artist, it's best to check a few rooms before check-in. The murals range from saturated garden scenes by Jean-Michel Verrett and Dominic Agnew to nude Pam photographers of Andrea Clinton who are seen floating on pale lavender walls. Even Banksy, the famous graffiti artist, is represented here. He created a room and hallway scenes for the hotel in 1999. Artworks aside, rooms are simpler and more like hostel accommodation. The hotel categorizes its rooms into two groups - those with private baths and those that are none. Rooms have shared bathrooms and access to separate toilets and showers, located along the corridors on each floor. The single rooms have 1 twin bed, while they are equipped with 2 single beds or 1 or 2 double beds. Neat freaks won't feel comfortable at Carlton Arms, as rooms show visible signs of wear and tear, and in some cases look dirty - water stains on bathroom ceilings, dirt around doorknobs, worn carpets, missing bulbs, creaky beds and bubbling air conditioning in the window. See more Carlton Arms rooms is the opposite of low-budget branded hotels. The hotel lacks traditional amenities such as a gym and business centre and facilities such as coffee machines, toiletries and robes. What it offers is thought-provoking artwork, a bohy community atmosphere, affordable prices, and an ideal location close to the subway and many midtown Manhattan neighborhoods.
