In seconds or minutes all devices (MACs and IPs) are connected to a private network, whether wireless or wired. Nowadays it is easy to share your broadband Internet connection with friends and neighbors. All you need is a router where all computers will be connected via cable or wireless password provided. And if you do that, you should consider managing the network to avoid the various small problems that may arise if one on LAN members tries to abuse bandwidth. How could he do that? Use P2P to transfer large files, watch high-definition movies by streaming, or play games non-stop. But the good news is already here, how you can use NetCut - an old fashion classic, but an easy-to-use solution. With this tool, you can properly manage these events and manage the network with the ARP protocol. Just run this little utility and you'll be able to list all MAC addresses for all computers, turn them on or off, turn the router or switch on or off. Also, NetCut is a great protection solution for ARP fake attacks - so you can stay away from these types of attacks.NetCut works with all versions of Windows ranging from XP to Windows 10. We should also note that this solution is free. We strongly recommend that you use it properly and not to abuse your capabilities after downloading and installing it.
