Law abiding citizens unite: you can now easily distinguish new Federal Firearms Act and BATFE regulations.. I was just another one. Want to report content that you find offensive? What can we do for you? To-do . I was just another one. You want to be happy, don't you? For the last 25 years, I've been searching for that meaning. I've been trying to be happy by trying to be good, and I've been trying to be good by trying to be happy. It just didn't work. I was failing as a man, and it was time to start over. If I'm to be happy, I have to be a success. I had to find the meaning of success. And to do that, I had to find my purpose in life. I was sure that happiness would come from good actions. Actions are easy to do. They are the simplest things. The hardest things in life are inaction and indecision. And I was doing a lot of both. I was waiting. I was thinking and I was doubting. And I was being indecisive. I was doing the impossible. I was holding on to every negative thought that came into my mind. I was keeping my thoughts of failure, and of what could happen if I did fail. I was not allowing my actions to flow from my thoughts. And worst of all, I wasn't moving from that stand. And that's when I realized that I was being left behind. I was left behind. I was wasting my life. I was failing my son. I was failing my wife. I was failing myself. I was falling into despair and self-pity. I was becoming selfish. I was holding onto defeat. I was losing my freedom. I was letting my actions be dictated by my thoughts. And, all of this was happening because I was waiting. I was waiting for success. And I was waiting for happiness. And when I finally began to get these two things, success and happiness, I realized that the time had finally come for me to start living my life. I had to act, and I had to act now. I was broken. My actions were broken. My emotions were broken. My thoughts were broken. My words were broken. All because I was waiting. I had been waiting for success. But I had been waiting for happiness. I was now going to make a change. I was going to start living my life. And when I did this 520fdb1ae7
