Rio de Janeiro state is spending billions of dollars to transform the city's beaches into the backdrop of the games. Friday marks the start of the next stage in the preparations for the World Cup in Brazil and it was kicked off with the ceremonial swearing in of Samir Marques as the state's new health minister. Marques is succeeding Ricardo Vieira, who was fired as the state's health minister by Governor Wilson Witzel last week. Witzel also removed the director of Rio state's public health institute, Anselmo Pires, who was under investigation for alleged corruption. Witzel accused Pires of attempting to bribe and manipulate a federal public prosecutor in exchange for backing off the corruption investigation. The governor's supporters on Friday say that Pires was sacked for incompetence. The state's health department has a budget of more than 1. Revenues collected from the national health institute have been used to pay the salaries of poorly performing managers. Witzel made his move on the eve of Brazilian President Michel Temer's visit to the state, which ends on Sunday. The president's visit will be meant to show solidarity with the city's citizens and its players. However, Witzel has indicated that his aides will not accompany Temer, allowing a fait accompli to continue in the city. In addition, international broadcasters such as ESPN will not have to pay any fines because they have already distributed the broadcasting rights to the games. Witzel is happy that the World Cup will be held in Brazil. In addition, Brazil's economy is recovering from a recession in the face of weak exports. After delaying Witzel's plan to end organized crime in Rio de Janeiro and neighboring Minas Gerais states, he is now focusing on more domestic matters. The measures to free Rio de Janeiro of the drug trade may also help Witzel politically at home as he faces impeachment proceedings. Witzel has been accused of wrongdoing in the state of Rio de Janeiro and the federal government is pushing a case forward in the Supreme Court to remove him 520fdb1ac7
