The New Deal is a U.S. economic program of the administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt between 1933 and 1939. The program aims to bring economic relief to the country, especially with reforms to the agricultural, industrial and service sectors. This program is the answer to the Great Depression in the United States and aims to improve finance, housing, and labor. THE GREAT DEPRESSION On October 29, 1929, the Great Depression began in the United States with 'Black Tuesday'. This period of economics is remembered for the collapse of the stock market, the failure of banks, the loss of currency, the bankruptcy of businesses, and the high unemployment rate. President Herbert Hoover's administration encouraged people to remain calm and let the crisis pass. FIRST NEW DEAL (1933 – 1934) On July 2, 1932, Franklin Roosevelt accepted the Democratic presidential nomination. Part of his speech was about the Hoover administration's ineffective play on the Great Depression. Roosevelt promised a 'new deal' would be an effective solution to the crisis facing the country. By November, he had won the presidential election. President Franklin Roosevelt took office in 1933. His administration immediately acted for the stability of the economy. Roosevelt announced a four-day bank holiday. Its purpose is to prevent people from withdrawing their money from banks. Later, Roosevelt's Emergency Banking Act was passed by Congress. Its main purpose is to re-organize the banks. This action brought positive results for some banks that have been reopened. The government also released the federal emergency relief agency, which provides $500 billion dollars (about $92.5 billion today) for relief operations. The Short-Term Civil Works Authority (CWA) was established to provide temporary work, such as employment in the construction of local government projects. The prohibition also ends, making the consumption of beer legal again. The Tennessee Valley Authority act was also signed. It allowed the government to build dams along the Tennessee River. This controls flooding and provides hydropower to residents. Another government program was the establishment of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (AAA). Its purpose is to increase the price of crops primarily by controlling them and paying farmers through subsidies. Several laws have also been passed, including the Homeowners' Lending Act. NEW DEAL MONDAY (1935 - 1938) The first new agreement was not enough for the sluggish progress of the country's economy. In 1935, President Roosevelt launched the 'New Deal' monday'. The government offers more aggressive programmes than the 'First New Deal'. One of the established by the government as the Building Progress Management Agency (WPA). WPA projects focus on building government infrastructure, such as schools, bridges, roads, parks, post offices and public offices. Jobs for writers, artists, musicians and other theatrical works are also provided. The Wagner Act of 1935 was established to protect workers from abusive companies. The Act primarily created the National Labor Relations Board. The Social Security Act of 1935 was further signed which provided programs for workers, including pensions for Americans. Insurance for the unemployed as well as children with disabilities and dependency is also provided. In 1937, the Farm Housing and Security Administration (FSA) was legislative. In 1938, the Fair Labor Standards Act was signed to establish appropriate working hours and minimum wages for different types of workers. END OF NEW DEAL The National Recovery Administration (NRA) has been declared ubistly declared by the U.S. Supreme Court. Furthermore, the Agricultural Adjustment Act (AAA) has been rewritten. These terms are based on the fact that the federal government does not have the power to regulate economic reforms. President Harry S. Truman (1945 - 1953) under the new agreement with his administration's fair deal. President Dwight D. Eisenhower (1953 –1961) left the New Deal program intact, while Lyndon B. Johnson (1963–1969) used the program for his administration's Congress. Some programs are still active today, such as the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA), the Federal Housing Administration (FHA), the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation (FCIC), the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), the Social Security System, and the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC). 3 Rs (Relief) , Recovery and Reform) In John Maynard Keynes's book, 'The General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money' published in 1936, he mentions that while capitalism is good, it also has some problems. In times of crisis, the government should step in. President Roosevelt's Keynesian economic philosophy was expressed in Rs 3 of the New Agreement: relief, recovery, and reform. Relief is aimed at the unemployed by providing temporary employment for them; Recovery is programs that can restore the economy to its stable state; and The Reform aims at programs that target the factors that caused the Great Recession, preventing it from happening again.
