Stationery can be remnants of relics from days when businesses communicated mostly with physical letters, but even in the digital age there may be times when you need to use traditional forms and envelopes. If you find yourself pouring too much money into stationery and business cards, cutting these costs can ensure more money goes to the bottom line. Before sending out a letter to a business form, consider if the letter will be effective. This will not only save you the cost of using unsmarter stationery and envelopes, but will also provide additional savings from lower postage costs. You can also contact customers, suppliers, and other stakeholders to find out if they prefer to correspond strictly by email or other paperless methods. If you use stationary forms infrequently, Xerox recommends printing your own as needed to save costs rather than hiring a printer to do the job. If you have employees, ask them to use stationery with caution as well. For example, office supplies can get lost in office drawers, so sometimes remind your employees to return unused items to the office pool. When ordering items such as envelopes, forms and business cards, buy in bulk to save costs. It is often cheaper to buy your supplies every quarter than every few weeks. You can also cut costs with shared brands if your supplier offers them; Shopping around for the lowest valued supplier; and negotiate discounts if your main supplier does not offer competitive prices. There's nothing better than getting a handwritten letter. Whether it's a birthday card, a thank you note, or even just a sense of excitement, knowing someone took the time to take their hands off the keyboard and on the handle can make a real difference in today's world. And if you're admittedly not the most sentimental person, that's fine. You just never know when this event will come and you want to write a note. But the experience is everything, so even if you don't have the best handwriting, it's still important to have a large set of stationery. Whether you prefer a modern monogram, vintage style cards are personalized with your name or other information, or charming which will bring a smile to someone's face- there are so many options (almost too many) when it comes to stationery. So we oversaw some of the best options out there. Whether you want to express your love or just thank your neighbor for this loaf of homemade banana bread, here are the best stationery kits to choose from. Courtesy rifle Co Stock up on stamps and pens because you never know when you need to write someone a note. Fortunately, the rifle paper company has you covered in style. The Botanical Social Stationery set features iconic floral illustrations of the brand. Each set comes with a 12 cap weight of flat pages that fold into cards. There are four maps of three different colors/butterfly designs along with matching envelopes. These are just great cards to have at hand suited for a variety of purposes, from thank-you notes to birthdays and even those unfortunate expressions of sympathy. Packed in a matching cardboard box, stash them in your desk at home or at work. These cards are so adorable that you will probably find new reasons to send them. If you send love notes or think of you to a close friend, anyone who receives a note on the paper lips, the lips of the card will appreciate this paper equivalent of a smooch. With a delightfully illustrated lip design on the one hand, on the other hand there is plenty of room to write your greeting. Like most Papier products, these cards have several personalization and upgrade options. Add your name or monogram for a really special touch. These cards are made from high quality stock (no need to worry about felt feather tip bleeding through) with your choice of one or double thickness. The heat-white Mohawk paper has an egg shell finish that makes the design pop. While you definitely want this set for yourself, keep in mind that it also makes a very thoughtful gift. Can't decide between stationery printed with your full name or just a monogram? This selection from Minted checks both of these boxes with a design that shows your full name in black ink along with one big bold initial set of letters right behind it. But the setting doesn't stop there. Six color themes are available to choose from, including Sunshine (yellow), Military (grey-green), Spring (pink), and Marine (light blue). Want to give a flat card some extra pizzazz? In addition to the classic rectangle, flat edges, round edges, and vintage-style jagged are also available. No matter what form you go with, it is impossible to make the wrong choice. This card will also appeal to anyone who strives to live an eco-friendly lifestyle because it is printed standard on C-certified, 100 percent post-consumer waste and manufactured with wind energy. The name Crane and Co is practically synonymous with personalized stationery. It is one of the oldest clerical ones out there and offers many timeless choices. If you consider yourself an old soul or tend to gravitate towards vintage styles, opt for Pacific Avenue personalized monogrammed notes. This design is a classic style that takes monograms to a whole new level. Crane offers three old-fashioned style monogrammed designs for these folding cards.
