Based on an unpublished screenplay by Vivek Agnihotri and Kaavya Viswanathan, the film was screened at the Indian Film Festival of Melbourne (IFFM) and the Mumbai Film Festival in 2013. The film is slated to release on 8 March 2014. Story The film is about a young Indian man living in Chandigarh, who has come to sell his car (Maruti 800) on the streets of the city. His story of finding himself a rich bride and how he successfully courts her is interspersed with many satirical asides about what life is like in Chandigarh and the Punjab in general. He first meets an Indian family who is preparing for their daughter's wedding. He overhears a conversation between the father, the bride's parents and her brothers where the bride's brothers state that the family has all the money and are only searching for a bride. The Indian man then walks through the streets selling the Maruti 800, while talking about the difficulties of life in Chandigarh. He sees the bride's father on the streets and is immediately attracted to her beauty. The father asks him if he is looking for a rich bride. The Indian man asks him how much he pays. The father quickly counters him by saying he only pays what the girl's father is willing to give him. The Indian man asks him if he would be willing to give the bride's father one lakh, five thousand rupees, to say to his daughter he likes her. The father's initial response is that is a very high amount of money. The Indian man then says that the girl's father might only be able to give him ten thousand and agrees to ask him to give the girl's father the money. The father quickly agrees. The Indian man walks into the bride's house and is shocked to find that the father has sold his daughter. The bride's father introduces him to the girl. She is pleased to see him. However, he is confused when her father's friend says to him to "chheechhe chaandakay". This is a Bhojpuri expression that roughly translates to "Don't mess around". He goes back to the man and says to him that he will leave after that if he messes around. This makes the man realize that the girl is a Dalit. He asks her father if he can see her father, but he says that he will not see him. The father's friend then comes up and the girl's brother
