When your Android device receives a security update, you won't be able to use Fly GPS to shroud your location. However, there are several ways to work: reduce your phone/tablet's Android version to the previous release. Alternatively, you can install Fly GPS as a system app on your phone. However, it is important to mention here that both of these gaps require rooting of your device. This is a well-known Fly GPS problem that arose immediately after the release of the Android security update. The good thing is that we have a working solution here in our official Best Android forum. You can even discuss your views with fellow Fly GPS users there. ☺ It recently appears that Fly GPS has some compatibility issues with the latest versions of Android Nougat, including: Android 7.0, Android 7.1, Android 7.1.1, Android 7.1.2 and later. Many of our blog readers have had great success with an alternative impersonation program, i.e. Fake GPS GO Joystick. You can download it here and see if it suits you. This usually happens when mocking places are turned on, which is contrary to Pokemon GO. This can be easily solved, we have an easy track set failed to detect a local error pokemon go. The best way to avoid any possible soft ban on Pokemon GO using local hacking is to intelligently use joystick controls and slowly move your character, as Niantic servers keep track of your last location. Here's an example: If you suddenly travel with your character using a joystick from point A to point B in seconds, the same distance for which you usually need five to ten minutes to cover, then your account will be soft forbidden. So I suggest you use local hacking apps wisely to protect your account any type of insurance. In the conditions of pokemon GO hacking, this issue is called rubber rubber Where your Pokemon trainer will randomly jump between your true location and the fake location of your own. It's used for several different purposes and different apps, from routing with Google Maps to searching a nearby restaurant. It's an accurate and accurate geolocation system, but why do we want to pretend your position? It's good for some people... Why fake your GPS position? No need to go and ask fly GPS developers for Android, because we ourselves can find a number of good reasons: from anecdote game with our geolocation, deceptive our place on the map, to trying to cheat apps based on geographical criteria. These are the main reasons, and that's where Pokemon GO comes in, because it has given such a program quite a lot of popularity among the public. Main Features of Fake Places The Google Maps API is running. Import and export locations. Set up favorite locations. If you're wondering how the global Fly geoposition system works, it's really really You just need to explore the map and click on the place you want to impersonate. Then, in the pop-up window, try to geolocate yourself in that position, stop gps, or add a location to your favorites. Why does Fly GPS shut down when I open Pokemon GO? A few lines above, we mentioned the augmented reality game as one of the biggest promoters of this kind of application. Precisely because they allow users to find creatures located all over the world, without going from the current situation ... In other words, they help them cheat and complete their Pokédex easier. However, the game did not detect such a program at the beginning, but when they realized how many people used GPS spoofers to cheat, they became more restrictive in their use. So if fly GPS shuts down it has to do with restrictions to implement Niantic... and remember that you can get banned if they detect that you are using this type of program. If this fake GPS doesn't work or crashes, it's because you've been caught. from.
