The Amazing Robot, 'Roboto'

ANITA HAGER

Bjorn was a very intelligent young man. He was creative and inventive. He had a workshop in his own backyard.

He was busy working on his latest invention - creating a very efficient robot!

It wasn't going to be just any other robot; instead it was going to be a robot that would have life – just like a human.

Bjorn worked day and night perfecting his robot. He made sure the robot's legs and hands worked properly. He wanted the robot's eyes, ears, nose and mouth to work just like a human's; after all, he was making a robot that resembled a human.

He named the robot Roboto.

One day, while he was working on perfecting his robot, Bjorn heard someone speak in a strange voice...

“Hey there, it’s me,” said the voice, “I want to know why you are making me.”

Bjorn soon realized that it was Roboto talking.....

Bjorn was overjoyed.

“You can talk! That means you can think too!” Bjorn exclaimed.

Then Bjorn thought for a while and said, “Roboto, your purpose is to help people.”

“I like that,” said Roboto with a big smile across his metallic face.

Once Bjorn had completed work on Roboto, and Roboto was full of life, Roboto set off on his mission – to help people.

He started walking around, searching for people who needed help. The first person he met was an elderly man who was seated on a bench in the park. He was staring at his laptop. It seemed like he was having difficulty working on his laptop.

Roboto thought, “Oh, I can help this man.’

With that, Roboto sat on the bench by the man’s side and asked, “Hey there, need any help?”

The elderly man looked from over his spectacles and whined, “Oh, another new invention.”

Roboto spoke again, “Yes, I am a new invention, and I am here to help you.”

The man bellowed, “I don’t want this new technology in my life!”

“I see,” said Roboto, then he quipped, “But it seems like you enjoy working on your laptop.”

The man replied with a grumpy face, “The fact is, I’ve only just learned how to send emails. And that’s because all my friends forced me to learn to send emails. I am already fed up with all this jumbled up stuff. Go away new technology!”

And so, Roboto walked away from the man thinking, ‘That’s okay. There must be other people who need my help.’

Just as he had imagined, right in front of him was a woman who was carrying a load of groceries. She was struggling to balance all the grocery bags. It looked more like she was juggling them.

Roboto knew it would be a simple task for him to carry all those heavy grocery bags.

“Hey there,” he said with a bright smile, “Let me help you carry your groceries.”

The woman stopped and stared at Roboto. Then she said firmly, “I am an independent woman and I need no help!”

Roboto was sad to hear this. He had been built to help and yet people didn't want his help even though they clearly needed it. He was sad that people couldn't accept his help, that they couldn't accept help and a new way of doing things.

Suddenly Roboto felt someone tap on his shoulder. It was a young child.

"I am Silver," the young child said shaking hands with Roboto.

Silver wanted to know why Roboto looked so sad. Roboto explained that nobody wanted his help. Silver suggested that, as Roboto was a big, strong robot, he find a factory and help them.

Roboto thought that was a great idea and soon he came to a factory that had lots of heavy objects all over the place. He looked around for someone who needed his help, but to his disappointment there was nobody around.

“Hey, anybody there?” He called out. But there was no answer.

Then Roboto noticed that the factory was completely still. There was no one there and everything seemed abandoned. When Roboto got to another the door, he saw a sign that read ‘BANKRUPT’.

“Oh, what a shame,” he cried, “Why did this factory go bankrupt? What happened?” He asked, but there was no one to reply.

Roboto continued to walk around, searching for another factory. To his delight he found one not far away. He was eager to help out, however he saw that the people in this factory were not working. Instead they were protesting. All the workers were standing outside the factory holding signs.

There were reporters taking photographs of the protestors. Some were interviewing them.

Roboto read one signs that said, 'Business Moving to China!' and 'Local jobs GONE!'

Roboto was now feeling very sad, but he didn't give up trying to find a factory where he could help the people.

To his joy, he found another factory. The manager of this factory was a very nice young man. He welcomed Roboto warmly and said, "Yes, I want you to help out in my factory. You can start work right away."

Roboto walked happily up to the other workers. Since the manager had not introduced him to them, the other workers were surprised to see him.

“Oh, it’s a robot. Why are you here?” they asked rudely.

“To help you,” Roboto answered cheerfully.

One worker asked, “What work are you supposed to do?”

“Whatever helps” said Roboto but he really didn’t know how he could help, as the manger hadn’t told him.

So, as the other workers did their jobs, Roboto tried to help them, but they said, “You are in our way, move aside.”

Roboto insisted, “I know I can help you and I know my work will help your job be done faster. So let me help.”

The other workers wouldn’t listen to him. Instead they were mad at Roboto. So much so, that some of them threw obstacles in his way to trip him.

“Ouch!” yelled Roboto as he fell to the ground. “That really hurt,” he mumbled.

While he was sitting there, straightening his bent leg, Roboto felt a hot liquid pour down his shoulder. He shrieked as the hot liquid short-circuited his arm movements.

Roboto knew they had tripped him and spilt coffee on him because they were mad at him, but he was still determined to help the other workers.

“Let me help,” he pleaded, but they all just walked away without a word.

The next day they sent him to get some tools from the equipment room and when he went to leave, he found himself locked in. Roboto realized that the other workers had purposely locked him in the room.

Suddenly the manager burst in through the door of the equipment room. He yelled angrily at Roboto, “I hired you to help out the workers, but they say you do nothing and I find you hiding doing nothing in here!”

With that, the manager fired Roboto saying, “This robot thing is not working, you are not helping me.”

By now Roboto was feeling rejected. He sat in the corner of a bus stop, wondering why people didn't understand that he could be of help. He was strong and he could work much faster than humans.....

Roboto felt a tap on his shoulder...

It was Silver...

“I am so happy to see you again Silver,” Roboto said hugging the child.

There were tears in Roboto’s eyes. Silver asked him what was wrong and he said sadly, “Nobody wants me. They are not willing to take in a robot who can help them. They don’t like or don’t understand my new technology and what I can do to help them.”

Silver said thoughtfully, “My uncle George has a small factory. Maybe you could help out the workers there. Come with me and I’ll take you to my uncle’s factory.”

Together Roboto and Silver went to George's factory. George, was happy to meet Roboto.

"Welcome Roboto, I am so glad to meet you," he said warmly.

George went around the factory, introducing Roboto to all the workers. George said, "My dear workers, I have taken in Roboto to help you out with your heavy workloads. So work together with him and be co-operative."

Roboto realized that it was a factory that produced machinery. The workers were finding it very difficult to move around the heavy equipment.

They were sweating and panting as they lifted the heavy machinery with great difficulty. Roboto started work right away. He began to lift the machinery and other heavy equipment with ease. The other workers were amazed. They were happy their work load was lightened.

“Roboto, you are great! You are making our workload much lighter. It’s so much easier for us now!” they said praising Roboto.

Roboto was so happy that he was able to help.

He smiled and said, “I can work more. I am strong!”

“

The other workers started to find even more tasks for Roboto to do.

In no time, Roboto was very busy lifting heavy machinery and carrying them to their proper places. He also helped the other workers to assemble parts of the machinery.

Soon the other workers realized that since Roboto was working so fast, the work was getting done in half the normal time. That meant there was a lot of spare time.

They began to worry about keeping their jobs, but when they said this to George he was happy. He said to his workers, “Now that you all have more free time, you can help me out in improving on the designs and efficiency of our products - the machinery.”

The workers agreed to this, and they began collecting all their ideas and worked through them, each contributing to develop their products to be more efficient.

All the while, Roboto was doing his duty of lifting heavy equipment and helping in assembling the parts together – in double quick time.

The factory was now producing new improved machinery, which was also helping their customers to be more streamlined and efficient in building their products. George's customers let him know that they were really pleased and that their sales had increased.

This gave George another idea. He said, “My dear workers, now let's concentrate on how to sell more of our new and improved products.”

So all the workers were busy finding new strategies to sell their new and improved products. In no time, they were discovering new methods of connecting with new customers and able to sell not only their machinery products made in the factory, but all the other products they had developed; such as the 'learning to use the machinery' training.

In the meantime, Roboto was happily working in this splendid factory. He could see that the other workers had more time to concentrate on improving the design of the products and coming up with innovative ideas to support the product in other ways because he was doing the hard work on their behalf.

When the other workers thanked him, Roboto always said, “My purpose here is to help you. There is no need to thank me because I love the feeling of helping the other workers so they can reach their potential.”

George noticed that even though things had been OK before Roboto arrived, now his workers were much happier and there was time to get to know each other. Because they had time to talk and chat, George noticed that this was when the best ideas were created to improve a product or add a new design that would enhance the product even more. He also saw that the factory was very busy since they were able to sell more and more products. The company's earnings began to rise rapidly.

George, being a smart businessman who also loved to share his successes, immediately increased the salaries and other benefits for his workers. His workers were now able to improve their lifestyles. They knew they owed it to Roboto and his hard work to have such balance between work and family as well as being able to contribute more to the company's success.

Roboto's popularity with the other workers continued to increase. They always appreciated him and they even teased him and cracked jokes with him.

Roboto was so glad that he was accepted and able to help. He worked happily every day.

With a greater focus on social interactions, he was able to meet the other workers at the park and to play chess and other games with them.

He also got to play with the worker's children. They all loved him. The kids said to Roboto that their parents always praised him as he had lifted all the hard work off their shoulders and helped improve their lifestyles.

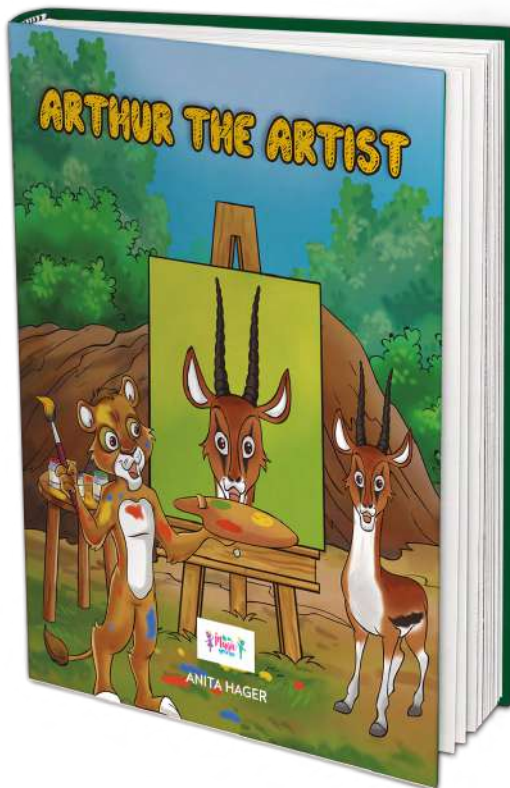

That made Roboto very happy. He was doing what he loved best - helping people! And George and the workers included him in social activities when they weren't working. He felt part of a big, happy, extended family. Watching the workers play with their children made him wonder, 'is there another robot out there like me?'. . . .

I am glad to gift a fantastic book and two other bonuses to you and your kids.

A perfect tale for every child who adores animals and loves nature. Arthur is a young lion who lives in the jungle together with his mother and father. This lion is very different from all the other lions in the jungle – he loves to paint. While the other lions of his age go out hunting, he prefers to stay home and create marvelous paintings on his easel.

We all live in a society where some behaviors are more accepted than others. Just like Arthur, we sometimes have to rise above our traditions and follow our hearts. Being the magic you are!

Anita Hager is a mother of two who lives in a small cozy town in Norway. She and her husband also share their home with four cats. Her imaginative and meaningful children's stories follow in the tradition of her Grandmother who read to her when she was a little girl. Now Anita reads her own stories to her two little boys at night and has decided to share them with others.

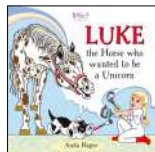

You will see her love of animals reflected on each page as well as her dream to help children grow up knowing how special they are.

She believes that reading time is a special time, and that's why you need special books for your children — stories that inspire; stories with a deeper meaning. She has created Be the Magic You Are series of children's books that specializes in these types of books. Books with stories that inspire children to be the magic they are by being themselves and reaching for their dreams.

The first album in the Be the Magic You Are series is released and contains 17 songs from the books in the Be the Magic You Are series. You can find it on iTunes.
