There are no settlers here. Instead, players take on the role of pirates who build their hideouts - called pirate loggias - on all islands and sail to find new places and build more pirate looms there. Catan experts will easily understand that many basic elements of the Catan main game are included in CATAN Junior, although - in accordance with the theme - they have received different names: pirate dens are built next to the islands, and if the numbers on the islands are rolling, players receive resource tiles. On the tiles of resources are depicted gold, goats, wood, melasa and skins. These tiles are used to build ships and more pirate sloths or buy development cards (here called Coco tiles), which are played immediately after their purchase. To start a new ship, you need wood and wool of goats. And if you want to build a manger of pirates, besides wood and wool, you also need cutlass and melas. The thief - well known from catan's main game - also exists in Catan Junior, but here he is a ghost man named Spectre Captain. Ghost captain isn't as bad as in the CATAN base game. It blocks the production of resources on the islands on which it is placed, but that's all - nothing has been stolen. Unlike the CATAN adult game, players do not have to hold cards in their hands, but can put the soles of the resource in front of them. Catan Junior can be played as a game with 2 players. Although Catan Junior contains some simplified rules so that 6-year-olds can participate without any difficulties, it is still a ruthless CATAN game. The settlers of Catan Jr. is a fun representation of Catan for children who are not yet old enough for the original settlers of Catan. The elements of the original are clearly reflected in it, but are somewhat simplified. For example, roll the dice for raw materials and you can easily exchange with the bank or ports. With these raw materials you can build pirate castles and ships. Which is the equivalent of houses and streets in the original version. It's nice that there's no distance rule, so don't wipe each other off so fast. The construction of castles and ships is quite fast, because the raw materials are abundant and can be easily exchanged. Whoever built the first seven castles wins the game! Game tips Make sure you get as many different resources as possible, so you don't have to trade with the bank or other players. Pay special attention to the resources other pirates need. If you own this, you can have a good job. The game has quite high density control, which can take some first accustomed to for children. But on the other hand, the game is able to emulate the experience of the original. This is a very pleasant game to play with your children and a nice step on the original.
