may not understand that leadership management competency of leadership may be to not understand the situation. Leadership, Fiedler, Fiedler, and Fiedler developed several leadership theories. Examples of leadership theories were leadership styles. Fiedler's styles were characterized by the leader's behavior, task structure, and leader-member relations. Fiedler's contingency theory is one of the most popular leadership theories. Fiedler's theory suggests that the effectiveness of a leader is dependent on the fit between the leader's style and the situation. Fiedler's theory includes the leader-member relations (LPC) scale, which assesses the leader's perception of the relationship with subordinates. Fiedler's theory suggests that leaders are either task-oriented or relationship-oriented. Fiedler's theory has been widely studied and applied in various contexts, such as organizations, teams, and military units. Fiedler's theory has some limitations, such as the assumption of a stable and unchanging environment. Fiedler's theory has been criticized for its lack of empirical evidence. However, Fiedler's theory has been influential in the study of leadership and has been applied in various fields, such as management, psychology, and social sciences.
