

Evelyn Mestemacher

Program Assistant - Soft Power, Hard Questions

Evelyn Mestemacher is a doctoral student in International Relations at Hitotsubashi University, specializing in China's foreign policy and China–Africa relations. Her research examines conditions under which China's Security - Development Nexus contributes to reducing violent conflicts in East Africa. Her other research interests include arms trade, maritime security, and military strategy.

She holds a master's degree in international relations from Ritsumeikan University and has presented her research at multiple academic conferences on topics including China's development–security engagement in East Africa, port infrastructure and power projection, and maritime strategy. Her work primarily uses qualitative policy analysis to explore China's evolving role in regional and global governance, while she is also developing expertise in quantitative research methods. Evelyn is fluent in Chinese, English, and Japanese, enabling her to engage with diverse academic and policy communities across international contexts.
