Creating your very own solar system When you start a new game, you have an option to start with a random star map or you can start with a solar system generated for you. This will guide you in creating a solar system as it has been done automatically for you. It is always possible to adapt your new system to your own liking. First, select the solar system you want to work on. It can either be a random star map or you can select one from the list of your existing solar systems. Next, you will be able to check the design you want for your solar system. The spatial characteristics of the solar system depend on its star map, but it can also be further adjusted with the 'Planet group' at the top of the screen. The available attributes are: Size : The overall size of the solar system. : The overall size of the solar system. Population: The number of stars and planets the solar system will have. The number of stars and planets the solar system will have. Orbit : The distance of the solar system relative to the star. : The distance of the solar system relative to the star. Resources: The amount of minerals and metals available in the star system. You can also adjust the number of moons you want in the system with the 'Moons' attribute. If you've created your solar system before, you can also import the specifications of your old solar system into this new one. This is useful if you are switching between different star maps. ## Changing the navigation settings After the creation of your solar system has been completed, you have to open the appropriate tab in the navigation settings. First, navigate to the tab for the star map you want to work with. This can be 'Random', 'Current star map' or 'Stellar cluster' in the navigation menu in the left of the screen. To change the star map, select the star map from the drop-down menu in the upper right of the screen and confirm with the right button. The navigation settings will now be changed to work with the new star map. ## Changing the theme The 'Theme' tab in the navigation settings is used to change the visual style of the current game. There are two options: The 'Solar System Style' tab can be set to one of the following themes: - ' 520fdb1ae7
