Medical disclaimer -- international technology to search for a drug name and the Internet have made it easier than ever to file a tax return from home and at your own time. However, tax preparation software from companies like H&R Block can take the convenience of filing taxes online to another level, meaning less stress, more time, and potentially higher returns for you. For the 2020 tax season, we can recommend H&R Block to anyone who asks for help, organizes their tax information and submits online. This software can help you accurately file a tax return with the state and federal, whether you work for one employer, own your own business, or have a complex tax situation that requires a multilateral approach. H&R Block even lets you file federal taxes for free, and they promise forms free of charge from competitor TurboTax. See our full review of 2020 tax software programs. If you want to file your own taxes this year, but also want to take advantage of the tax software that takes you through the process, H&R Block may be exactly what you need. Save Save to learn how this software works, which packages they offer and how much they cost, and how you can sign up. How H&R Block works one of the great advantages of H&R Block is their easy question-and-answer format. Once you have selected an option for the tax preparation software it offers, you will start the process by answering questions about your income and tax situation, especially by withdrawing information from the tax documents you have received from employers, customers and financial institutions. H&R Block also allows you to download your tax return last year as part of the process, which can be extremely useful when it comes to jogging your memory for deductions you may have taken in the past or even bills for which you paid interest. Questions you can expect to answer include family size, income, pension contributions you made to tax relief accounts and investment income. If you are a self-employed person or the owner of a small company, you will also answer questions about the revenues of your business, the deductions of your business, etc. What happens Next, as you enter all your information into the H&R Block online interface, the tax preparation software processes your data to see what deductions you may qualify for, which tax brackets will be taxed, and any potential changes you can make now to reduce your tax debt for the year. The software is even set to make suggestions that can help you lower the amount in taxes in general, such as contributing money to the traditional IRA. H&R Block also makes it easy to save your information and return to it later. You may need a few days to gather all the information to file your taxes for the year, for example, or you can start and understand that you need to contact a customer or employer for more information. Either way, you can start and stop your tax return at any point in the process. Once you have entered all the information that H&R Block requires, the software provides you with an overview of your tax return, including your full income for the year, how much you owe the IRS or your tax office to the state, or how much you can expect to receive back in your refund. Keep in mind that H&R Block offers transparent pre-pricing that makes it easier to understand your full costs in advance, and that they also offer auditing assistance that is included if you are selected for tax verification after using the software. H&R Block even offers customers an average annual tax registration designed to help you assess the amounts withheld so you don't hit a surprise tax bill the next time the IRS roll. Finally, H&R Block offers a refund tool that lets you track your refund if you're owed money for the year. They also offer the option to request an advance refund of up to $3,500, which comes on the H&R Block Emerald Prepaid Mastercard. What's new for H&R Block in 2020 Tax software programs, H&R Block is always tweaking its offerings and using technology to offer greater value to the user. For 2020, improvements include the ability to download your last year's tax returns with the software - even if you used another company to file your taxes last year. While people may think changing tax preparers is a challenge, that's not the case when you switch to H&R Block, they write on their website. Switching to blocking can be as easy as two clicks. Simply drag and drop to import tax information from any other vendor. H&R Block has also expanded its price guarantee in 2020, offering a new No Surprise Guarantee, which also comes with auditing assistance and average annual tax registration for all of its customers. H&R Block believes their pricing should come at least $10 lower than TurboTax with all its paid tax filing products, and this new price guarantee will help ensure this is the case.
