EVE Online may not have mainstream name recognition for online games like World of Warcraft or even Destiny, but it is a very popular name with hundreds of thousands of subscribers. Now that massive player base is being called on behalf of medical science. The developer of CGP games has announced a new addition to the game called Project Discovery. In it players will be invited by the in-game humanitarian faction eve sisters to play a minigame based on recognizing patterns and differences between images. Players will receive game prizes and will see their Project Discovery rankings increase as they complete more and more tasks. At the same time, they will promote an important scientific research project because the images are analyzed to have high quality scans of real human cells. CGP Games is working in collaboration with massively Multiplayer Online Science and the University of Reykjavik to help improve and expand the human protein database. By introducing a minigame – and the rewards associated with it – EVE Online players are attracted as a huge international research team. Not only is this a great PR move to a game sometimes associated with large-scale grieving, but it seems to have been met with tremendous care and reward. The same functionality might have shoehorned into the game in different ways, but taking the time to work on a study of the game, which speaks volumes about the developer's attention to detail. The Project Discovery minigame is up and running now for anyone who wants to help with research, or just start working on their rank. Although a paid subscription is required for most of the content available on Eve Online, players can access Project Discovery without paying a cent. Editors' Recommendations Season 3 of the award-winning Killing Eve premieres this Sunday, April 12, 2020 at 9pm EST. All eight new episodes will be simulcast on BBC AMERICA and AMC Show stars Sandra Oh as a British M15 officer carrying an assassin that's a bit psychopath, played by Jodie Comer. After all, each becomes obsessed with each other making for an exciting take on the cat and mouse genre. However, I don't feel good at pigeonholing the show genre. It simply violates too many conventions. It's constantly surprising, and what you might expect to happen rarely ever does. The show manages to be both hilarious and grueful at times, and yet the flow feels strangely comfortable. When the first show aired, it pulled it to about 500,000 viewers in the episode. However, now that the word out, viewers are millions per episode. It is currently rated at 94% for fresh rotten tomatoes. This is one of my top shows of 2020. Where to Watch Season 3 Killing Eve's first episode of the new season of Killing Eve airs Sunday, April 12 on AMC and BBC America. If you are stuck in the office and can't catch a race on TV, there are several online options that can help you keep up with the action. From low-tech blogging, audio streams from the Motor Racing Network (MRN) and performance racing network (PRN) to fully high-tech streaming video and data, there is a ability to match every budget and Internet connection speed. The first option to help keep up with the race is to watch the free options available NASCAR.com. Lap-By-Lap is updated regularly. This NASCAR.com provides brief updates on the operating order, warnings, and all major events during the race. Pros: Free, good slow internet connection. Cons: Ok to keep up with the basics, but hard to keep track of the flow of races. From the 2012 NASCAR Sprint Cup season, there are several places NASCAR fans can hear the MRN audio broadcast streamed live on the Internet. After many years of requests from fans of both MRN and PRN can now stream their NASCAR broadcasts for free from their respective websites www.MotorRacingNetwork.com and www.goprn.com. PRN streaming also supports all platforms, including Android and iPhone devices. Pros: Free, full radio radio You need a moderately fast Internet connection. SiriusXM Satellite Radio also provides streaming capabilities for subscribers. This package includes all the extensive NASCAR programming available at SiriusXM including qualifying, all races and tons of in-depth analysis, interviews and specials throughout the year. SiriusXM streaming works on their website, as well as their mobile apps for iPhone, iPad and many Android and BlackBerry devices. Pros: Full event coverage, as well as 24x7 NASCAR content, mobile apps provide streaming on the go. Cons: Not free, requires SiriusXM subscription. Finally, we come to NASCAR's own feature rich, but more expensive, options. TrackPass at NASCAR.com is divided into three different products that increase the features and cost as you go. The first is the TrackPass Scanner, which includes audio-only streaming of the Sprint Cup, Nationwide and Camping World Truck Series events, as well as live in-car scanner audio for all drivers during Sprint Cup races. The other option is TrackPass Race View, which includes all the audio features of the scanner, as well as extensive telemetry data. You can know where everyone is on the road all the time. This is one of the best ways to follow your favorite driver no matter where he is running on the road. RaceView also includes their virtual video feature, where telemetry data is translated into computer game-like images that reflect what is actually happening off the road. Without true streaming video, this is the next best way to visualize the race. The last chance from NASCAR.com is trackpass Race View 360. It includes all the standard Race View features, and it adds even more virtual video capabilities, advanced driver stats and pit crew performance stats that are not available anywhere else. Pros: Full event coverage, tons of data and Virtual Video is not available in anyplace elseCons: The most expensive option requires decent internet bandwidth
